

within reach of a wide circle of readers. The translation is founded on the second Italian edition, which has been considerably changed and enlarged, some of the chapters arranged in different order, new facts and observations added, as well as a new chapter, dealing more fully with the special environment of women. As it stands, the work is in its own department unrivalled—whatever dispute the reader may have with Professor Marro at special points—as regards its useful summaries of the work of others, the very large body of original facts presented, and the author's subtle and profound observations and suggestions. As Professor Magnan, who writes an introduction to this translation, truly remarks, "this magnificent study of puberty, abounding in curious documents, concerns not only physiologists and alienists, but magistrates and anthropologists, while every doctor will find in it information that will be useful to him." HAVELOCK ELLIS.

Centralblatt für Anthropologie, Ethnologie, und Urgeschichte. VI
Jahrgang, 1901. Costenoble, Jena.

This useful and ably-conducted journal has now completed its sixth year under the editorship of Dr. Buschan, who is well known as an indefatigable worker in many fields of anthropology, especially those which touch on medicine and psychiatry. The attention of our readers was called to the Centralblatt some years ago (April, 1897), and since then several of the more important original articles that have appeared in it have been summarised here. While every number contains an original article by some leading anthropologist, the chief value of the Centralblatt is due to the excellent and concise summaries and reviews, executed by a highly-competent staff, of articles, memoirs, and books coming within the field of anthropology. Many interesting investigations are thus rendered easily available, and due attention is given to work appearing in the less known languages, Russian, Hungarian, Bohemian, etc.

We regret to learn that the publisher of the Centralblatt finds that the support given to the journal does not warrant him in continuing its publication. At this juncture, however, Dr. Buschan has come to the rescue with characteristic energy, and from the beginning of the new year proposes to carry on the Centralblatt at his own risk. It is to be hoped that he will be encouraged in this determination to continue a review which has a place of its own, and which he has shown himself so well able to conduct. Certain aspects of anthropology have a very intimate bearing on psychology and psychiatry, and the importance of this connection is constantly becoming more widely realised. Anthropology is duly recognised in the epitomes furnished by the Journal of Mental Science, but except in a journal specially devoted to the subject, it is obviously impossible to keep fully abreast with the large amount of anthropological work bearing on the brain and nervous system. The Centralblatt is published every other month, and the subscription is twelve marks; with postage, thirteen marks, twenty pfennigs. Dr. Buschan's address is 7, Friedrich-Carlstrasse, Stettin.