Picturing Political Science

Christopher A. Cooper, Western Carolina University
Todd A. Collins, Western Carolina University
H. Gibbs Knotts, Western Carolina University

ABSTRACT What do political scientists study? As part of a larger project, we coded every article in 25 leading journals between 2000 and 2007. We then created a word cloud of the 6,005 titles using www.wordle.net. The 150 most-used words appear in the word cloud. The size of each word is proportional to the number of times the word is mentioned. Draw your own conclusions.

doi:10.1017/S1049096509090490 PS • April 2009 365

Christopher A. Cooper is associate professor, director of the Public Policy Institute, and MPA director at Western Carolina University. His work on state politics, political communication, and political behavior has appeared in Public Administration Review, Political Research Quarterly, Social Science Quarterly, State Politics and Policy Quarterly, and other outlets.

Todd A. Collins is assistant professor of political science at Western Carolina University. He has a Ph.D. in political science from the University of Georgia and a JD from the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. His research and teaching interests center on judicial politics, public law, and American government.

H. Gibbs Knotts is associate professor and department head of political science and public affairs at Western Carolina University. His work on public opinion, southern politics, and public policy has appeared in journals including Journal of Politics, Public Administration Review, and Social Science Quarterly. He also co-edited the New Politics of North Carolina (UNC Press, 2008) with Christopher Cooper.