I have used Version 1 of Cinderella extensively when giving talks to schoolchildren which involve geometrical constructions, and I have also used it in an advanced undergraduate course to illustrate parallels and evolutes of plane curves. The new version is very much more powerful, but still easy to use, and the on-line documentation is good. I recommend it highly.

References
1. Peter Giblin, Review of Cinderella 1.2, Math. Gaz. 85 (July 2001) pp. 364-366.
2. H. Abelson and A. diSessa, Turtle Geometry, MIT Press (1981).
3. Ke Chen, Peter Giblin and Alan Irving, Mathematical Explorations with MATLAB, Cambridge University Press (1999).

PETER GIBLIN
Department of Mathematical Sciences, The University of Liverpool, Liverpool L69 7ZL

Acknowledgements

The Editor wishes to thank the following for refereeing items for the Gazette in the last year.

Referee (Affiliation)

Ian Anderson (University of Glasgow); John Appleby (University of Newcastle); Tony Barnard (King's College, London); John Baylis (Haverfordwest); Alan Beardon (University of Cambridge); Bill Brakes (University College, Northampton); Bob Burn (Exeter); Robin Chapman (University of Bristol); John Chick (Hertford Heath); Mark Cooker (University of East Anglia); Tony Crilly (St Albans); Michael de Villiers (University of KwaZulu-Natal); Rob Eastaway (London); Michael Fox (Leamington Spa); James Gazet (Eton College); Peter Giblin (University of Liverpool); Martin Griffiths (University of Manchester); Branko Grunbaum (University of Washington at Seattle); Roger Heath-Brown (University of Oxford); Ray Hill (University of Salford); Graham Hoare (Chalfont St.Peter); Graham Jameson (Lancaster University); Andrew Jobbings (Shipley); Simon Johnson (Dollar Academy); Donald Keedwell (University of Surrey); Thomas Koshy (Framingham State College); Imre Leader (Trinity College, Cambridge); Paul Levrie (Turnhout, Belgium); Barry Lewis (London); Nick Lord (Tonbridge School); Des MacHale (University of Cork); John Mahony (Christchurch, NZ); Adam McBride (University of Strathclyde);Tomas Persson (Centre for Mathematical Sciences, Lund, Sweden); Brian Philp (University of Birmingham); Douglas Quadling (Cambridge); John Rigby (University of Cardiff); Anthony Robin (Colchester); Tom Roper (University of Leeds); Peter Shiu (Sheffield); John Silvester (King's College, London); David Stirzaker (St John's College, Oxford); Karthik Tadinada (St Paul's School); Owen Toller (St Paul's School); Ian Warburton (Macclesfield); Tony Ward (Surbiton)