
CONTRIBUTORS

Arnold N. Scott is Professor of Philosophy at the University of Alabama at Birmingham. He is the author of The Philosophy and Economics of Market Socialism (Oxford, 1994) and Marx's Radical Critique of Capitalist Society (Oxford, 1990). He has been a visiting scholar at the Hoover Institution at Stanford University and the Social Philosophy and Policy Centre at Bowling Green State University.

Arrhenius Gustaf successfully defended his Ph.D. thesis Population Axiology at the Department of Philosophy, University of Toronto, in the fall of 1999. He is currently a researcher in the Department of Philosophy, University of Uppsala, where he is continuing to work on questions regarding moral obligations to future generations.

Barnes R. Eric teaches philosophy at Mount Holyoke College in Massachusetts, USA. He received his PhD. from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and he works primarily in the field of Utilitarian and Contractarian moral theory.

Copp David is Professor of Philosophy at Bowling Green State University. He taught previously at the University of California, Davis, the University of Illinois at Chicago, and Simon Fraser University. He is author of Morality, Normativity, and Society (Oxford University Press, 1995), and of many articles in moral and political philosophy. He is an associate editor of Ethics.

Davis George C. is an associate professor at Texas A&M University. His research areas are demand theory, applied econometrics, and methodology. He teaches price analysis, advanced demand analysis, and applied econometrics.

Calcott Paul is a lecturer in the School of Economics and Finance at Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand. His research deals mainly with public economics.

Goldfarb Robert S. is Professor of Economics at George Washington University. His recent research has focused on economic methodology, especially the problem of deriving plausible inferences from empirical literatures with diverse and often conflicting results. Additional research interests include the economics of cigarette addiction, and economic aspects of controversial public art.

Hausman Daniel M. is one of the founding editors of this journal. His most recent books are The Inexact and Separate Science of Economics, Causal

CONTRIBUTORS

Asymmetries, and (jointly with Michael McPherson) Economic Analysis and Moral Philosophy.

Hoover Kevin D. was educated at William and Mary College and Oxford University. He currently teaches economics at the University of California, Davis. He is the author of numerous articles in macroeconomics, monetary economics, economic methodology and the philosophy of science. His most recent book is Causality in Macroeconomics (Cambridge University Press, forthcoming). He is an editor of the Journal of Economic Methodology.

Leonard Thomas C. is a lecturer in the Department of Economics at Princeton University. His research investigates issues in the philosophy and history of economics, and of science. Current projects are in the economics of science, the role of social conventions, the economics of addiction, and the history of minimum-wage economics.

Nechyba Thomas is Associate Professor of Economics and Public Policy Studies at Duke University and a research associate at the National Bureau of Economic Research in Cambridge, MA. His research interests include primary and secondary education, federalism and the functioning of local governments, as well as public policy issues relating to disadvantaged families.

Priest Graham holds the Chair of Philosophy at the University of Queensland, Australia. He is the author of several books and many papers on philosophy and logic.

Sandqvist Tor is a teacher and doctoral student in the Department of Philosophy, Uppsala University. His interests are in philosophical logic, epistemology, philosophy of science, and philosophy of mind. The main focus of his work at present is on the connections between conditionals, causality, and belief revision.

Schabas Margaret is Professor of Philosophy, York University, Toronto. She has published extensively on the history and philosophy of economics, most notably on Jevons and the mathematization of economics (A World Ruled by Number, Princeton, 1990). Her current projects include books on concepts of nature in classical political economy, and the political economy of David Hume.

Sobel David is an assistant professor of philosophy at Bowling Green State University. His main research interests are in ethics, the theory of value, and reasons for action. His 'Well-Being as the object of moral consideration' appeared in this journal in 1998.

Sugden Robert is Leverhulme Research Professor at the University of East Anglia, Norwich. His research uses a combination of theoretical, experimental and philosophical methods to investigate issues in the area of welfare economics, social choice, choice under uncertainty, the foundations of decision and game theory, the methodology of economics, and the evolution of social conventions.

CONTRIBUTORS

Suranovic Steven M. is an associate professor of Economics and International Affairs at the George Washington University and Director of the International Trade and Investment Policy MA program at GW's Elliott School of International Affairs. He also runs the International Economics Study Center web site at <http://internationalecon.com>. His current research interests include fairness in international trade and addiction.

Tungodden Bertil is Associate Professor in Economics at the Norwegian School of Economics and Business Administration and a researcher at the Norwegian Research Centre in Organization and Management. His primary interest is distributive justice, and he has written on a variety of issues within this field (including Rawlsian reasoning, interpersonal comparisons of well-being, poverty measurement, and intergenerational justice).