

EDITOR'S NOTE

Once again, delays in receipt of reports of several parts of the Proceedings of the 1984 Annual Meeting of the Society have delayed publication. To this was added an unexpected administrative burden that befell the editor during the 1984-1985 academic year.

Mention must be made of the editorial work of second- and third-year students at the Wake Forest University School of Law, members of the Wake Forest International Law Society, who, with spirit and energy, undertook the first round of editorial work as a project for the year:

My secretary, Peggy Brookshire, is owed a special debt of thanks for her untiring efforts in retyping manuscript pages and patient hours in copying and otherwise assisting me with preparation of the Proceedings. Dean John D. Scarlett was supportive in this project and thanks go to him and the law school for their part in its completion.

I would be remiss in not concluding with a special note of appreciation to the Society's administrative staff, particularly Judith R. Hall, Administrative Director, with whom I had worked on the 1978 and 1982 Proceedings; Professor Richard W. Edwards, Jr., who edited the report on The Vienna Convention and the Law of Treaties; Seymour J. Rubin, Executive Director; and all the panel and workshop reporters whose names appear throughout the volume.
