

Editorial Announcement

From this issue the Journal of Anatomy will appear on a monthly basis to reduce time from acceptance to publication. The total number of pages per volume will remain the same. As in the past the scope of the Journal will continue to be broad, covering the development, maintenance, evolution and functional significance of structure in man and animals. Preference is given to experimental studies and to contributions on molecular and cell biology rather than purely descriptive studies. All contributions must include clear statements as to the reasons why they have been undertaken and the new information that they contain. There are no page charges and no charge is made for colour illustrations if the editors consider that they are essential.
