NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

Raymond Dennett is director of the World Peace Foundation in Boston, and lecturer in international politics at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy. He is managing editor of International Organization, and co-editor, with Joseph E. Johnson, of the symposium Negotiating with the Russians (1951).

Albin T. Anderson is assistant professor of history at the University of Nebraska. The recipient of a Ford Foundation Faculty Fellowship, he has been working at the Russian Research Center, Harvard University, during the past year.

Paul E. Zinner is a graduate fellow at the Russian Research Center, Harvard University, engaged in writing his doctoral dissertation. He has contributed previously to World Politics.

Jean Gottmann is professor at the Institut d'Etudes Politiques of the University of Paris and a member of the Institute for Advanced Study in Princeton. His recent publications include A Geography of Europe (1951) and La politique des états et leur géographie (1952).

Paul Kecskemeti is a member of the RAND Corporation, currently engaged in research into the psychological aspects of policy determination in the international field. He is the author of a forthcoming book on the theory of interpretation of signs and symbols, and has prepared for publication two volumes of essays by the late Karl Mannheim.

Dana G. Munro is director of the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs and professor of Latin American history and affairs at Princeton University. He is the author of The United States and the Caribbean Area (1934), The Latin American Republics: A History (1942), and edited The Refugee Settlement in the Dominican Republic (1942).

Morton A. Kaplan was an instructor in the department of political science at Ohio State University during the past year. He has received a visiting research appointment at the Center of International Studies, Princeton University, and will be concerned with applying to historical situations the theoretical considerations outlined in his research note in this issue.
