

Contributors

Ross Bellaby, PhD, is a senior lecturer in the University of Sheffield's Politics and International Relations Department. His main research examines the application of ethics to violence, with specific attention to developing ethical frameworks for intelligence activity. r.bellaby@sheffield.ac.uk

Thana C. de Campos-Rudinsky is an associate professor of Ethics, Law, and Global Public Policy at the Pontifical Catholic University of Chile and a research associate at the Von Hügel Institute at the University of Cambridge. She is also a research fellow at the UNESCO Chair in Bioethics and Human Rights, where she directs the research program on women's health. She received her DPhil in law from the University of Oxford. She is the author of The Global Health Crisis: Ethical Responsibilities (2017) and The Rule of Love: Love-Based Governance for Global Health (forthcoming). tc2@cam.ac.uk

Ron Dudai is a senior lecturer in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Ben-Gurion University in Israel. His book Penalty in the Underground: The IRA's Pursuit of Informers was published by Oxford University Press in 2022. His work appeared in, among others, the British Journal of Sociology, Human Rights Quarterly, Punishment & Society, and Law & Social Inquiry. He was co-editor of the Journal of Human Rights Practice. His recent research examines the nature and functions of death penalty laws in the absence of executions. dudair@bgu.ac.il

Juan Espindola is a research fellow at the Institute of Philosophical Research of the National Autonomous University of Mexico. He was trained as a political theorist at the University of Michigan. His research focuses on transitional justice and artificial intelligence. He is the author of Transitional Justice after German Reunification: Exposing Unofficial Collaborators (2015) and co-editor of Collaboration in Authoritarian and Armed Conflict Settings (2022). His most recent work has appeared in journals such as Theoretical Criminology, Journal of Social Philosophy, and Critical Review of International Social and Political Philosophy. juanespindola@comunidad.unam.mx

Cécile Fabre is a senior research fellow in politics at All Souls College in Oxford and professor of political philosophy at the University of Oxford. She holds degrees from the Sorbonne, the University of York, and the University of Oxford. Her research interests include theories of distributive justice, the rights we have over our own body, and the ethics of foreign policy. Her books include Cosmopolitan War (2012); Cosmopolitan Peace (2016); Economic Statecraft: Human Rights, Sanctions, and Conditionality (2018); and Spying through a Glass Darkly: The Ethics of Espionage and Counter-Intelligence (2022), in which she investigates Ethics & International Affairs, 37, no. 2 (2023), pp. 111–112.

© The Author(s), 2023. Published by Cambridge University Press on behalf of the Carnegie Council for Ethics in International Affairs

doi: 10.1017/S0892679423000242 the ethics of espionage. She is a fellow of the British Academy.

cecile.fabre@all-souls.ox.ac.uk

Alex Leveringhaus teaches political theory at the University of Surrey in the U.K. His primary research interest is the ethics of armed conflict. He is particularly interested in the ethics of intervention, as well as the ethical issues arising from advances in military technology. His book Ethics and Autonomous Weapons was published in 2016. He is currently working on a monograph on the ethics of weaponry. a.c.leveringhaus@surrey.ac.uk

Rhiannon Neilsen is the cyber security post-doctoral fellow at the Center for International Security and Cooperation (CISAC) at Stanford University. Her research focuses on cyber and AI in conflict, mass atrocities, online dis/misinformation, influence operations, and the ethics of war. Previously, she was a postdoctoral fellow at the Australian National University, a research consultant for the Institute for Ethics, Law and Armed Conflict (ELAC) at the University of Oxford, and a visiting fellow at the NATO Cooperative Cyber Defence Centre of Excellence in Tallinn, Estonia. neilsen@stanford.edu

Zeynep Pamuk is assistant professor in the Department of Government at the London School of Economics and Political Science. She is the author of Politics and Expertise: How to Use Science in a Democratic Society (2021). z.pamuk@lse.ac.uk