Can comparativists and specialists in "justice law" (criminal law and procedure, civil procedure, court organisation) from the Anglo-American and socialist legal systems usefully study one another's systems with a view to advancing theoretical and applied macro and microcomparison in their own system and on the international level generally? The articles contained in this volume, revised versions of papers presented to the Anglo-Soviet Symposium on Justice and Comparative Law held at Moscow in September 1984, address this issue in all its aspects. The articles themselves have appeared previously in issues 1 and 2 of the journal Coexistence (Volume 23, issues 1 + 2), but this volume also contains a hitherto unpublished translation of a new Soviet penal code and an extensive index.

Contents

Editorial Introduction. Comparative Criminal Law and Procedure. Codification of Criminal Law. Law of Evidence. Sentencing Policy. Effectiveness of Justice. Civil Procedure. Theoretical Model of a Criminal Code (General Part). Index.
