The Political and Legal Framework of Trade Relations between the European Community and Eastern Europe comprises contributions from a cross-section of leading experts in the field of relations between the European Community and Eastern Europe. Not only Western European authors but also Eastern Europeans provide a clear insight into the problems and prospects with regard to the political and commercial climate both at international and national level. Besides a brief historical reflection on relations between the EEC and COMECON and the EEC and the individual COMECON countries, an in-depth analysis of a wide range of issues is provided such as, the position of Western European countries in their relations with Eastern Europe, Eastern European enterprises in the EEC, export controls, financial cooperation and countertrade, the position of Eastern European countries in the GATT and anti-dumping with regard to imports from Eastern Europe. In the light of the recent Joint Declaration between the EEC and COMECON and of the rapid developments in relations between the EEC and the individual COMECON countries, this publication assumes a special importance. Lawyers, politicians, students, teachers and those in all walks of business life will find the book to be a valuable source of information and reference.

This is the fourth volume in the New Haven Studies in International Law and World Public Order, a series which brings together and continues the monographs prepared at the Yale Law School under the supervision of Myers S. McDougal and Harold D. Lasswell. This series will be of interest to scholars, practicing international lawyers, government officials and corporate personnel, as well as to students of international relations and political science.

The reprinting of this early work of the New Haven School, which contains a substantial new introduction by the author, is an opportunity to rediscover the vitality and resiliency of its founders' pioneering contributions to jurisprudence and international law.
