Award Recipients

APSA Black Graduate Fellows

Elise L. Longpre of Oakwood College, Janice-Marie Phillips of Whittenberg University, and Ida Catherine Terry of Morgan State University have been awarded APSA Black Graduate Fellowships for 1982-83. Anthony A. Shorter of Bethune-Cookman College was named a non-funded, alternate Black Graduate Fellow.

The Black Graduate Fellowship Program was initiated in 1969-70 with the Association support to provide opportunities for graduate training in political science to black students. The three funded Fellowships of $4,700 each for the academic year allow the winners to attend the university of their choice.

Congressional Fellowship Awards

APSA has announced six winners in the national competition for the 1982-83 Congressional Fellowship Program.

The winners—three political scientists and three journalists—will come to Washington, D.C. for a year of full-time work in the offices of senators and representatives.

Sponsored by the Association since 1953, the purpose of the Congressional Fellowship Program is to give outstanding young political scientists, journalists, medical faculty and federal agency executives an opportunity to acquire a rich understanding of the national legislative process.

Eugene J. Alpert, an associate professor at Texas Christian University, will take leave from the university next year to be a Congressional Fellow.

The 927 alumni of the Program include university presidents, deans and professors; newspaper and magazine publishers, editors and reporters; high-ranking executives in the federal bureaucracy; and congressmen and congressional staff aides.

The Congressional Fellows are scheduled to arrive here in early November for an orientation period before beginning work in Congressional offices of their choice. The program ends August 15, 1983.

The six winners, listed below, were selected by a committee of congressional scholars and journalists on the basis of superior academic training and professional experience.

1982-83 Congressional Fellows

Political Scientists

Eugene J. Alpert, associate professor, Texas Christian University.

Gary J. Andres, Ph.D. candidate, University of Illinois at Chicago Circle.

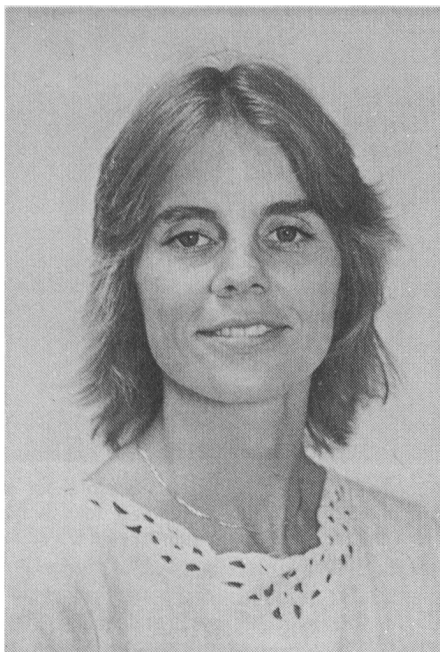

Paul Light, assistant professor, University of Virginia.

Journalists

Rebecca Nappi, reporter, The News-Journal, Wilmington, Delaware.

Rebecca Nappi, a reporter for The News-Journal in Wilmington, Delaware, will be a Congressional Fellow for the 1982-83 fellowship year.

Barbara A. Vobejda is an education writer for The Honolulu Advertiser and will be a Congressional Fellow next year.

William J. Skane, science producer, KQED Television, San Francisco.

Barbara A. Vobejda, education writer, The Honolulu Advertiser.

National Capital Area Pi Sigma Alpha Award

Charles L. Clapp, a Commissioner of the Interstate Commerce Commission and a distinguished political scientist, has been selected to receive the 1982 National Capital Area Political Science Association Pi Sigma Alpha Award. The Award, recognizing outstanding contributions which link political science and public service, was made in a ceremony at the Spring Conference of the Association on February 27 at Mount Vernon College in Washington, D.C.

Clapp holds a B.A. degree (Magna Cum Laude) from Tufts University, an M.A. from Harvard University, and a Ph.D. in political science and public administration from the University of California, Berkeley. He is a former Congressional Fellow of the American Political Science Association and author of The Congressman: His Work As He Sees It.

Previous award winners are Ernest S. Griffith, Francis O. Wilcox, Alan K. (Scotty) Campbell, Donna E. Shalala and Evron M. Kirkpatrick.

AAAS-Newcomb Cleveland Prize

Robert Axelrod and William D. Hamilton, both of the University of Michigan, received the AAAS-Newcomb Cleveland Prize for their article, "The Evolution of Cooperation" (Science, March 27, 1981, pp. 1390-1396).

Using game theory, the authors developed a method to analyze unrelated members of a society. They have demonstrated that cooperation, based on reciprocity and unselfishness instead of rivalry, is an integral part of evolution. Their work has implications for every aspect of cooperation in nature from societies of cells to those of plants, animals, and humans.

Gary A. Andres, a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Illinois at Chicago Circle, is one of the three political scientists selected to be a Congressional Fellow next year.

Axelrod, currently a professor of political science and research scientist of the Institute of Public Policy Studies at the University of Michigan, received the B.A. degree from the University of Chicago in 1964, and the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in political science from Yale University in 1966 and 1969.

Before joining the faculty at Michigan in 1974, Axelrod was assistant professor of political science at the University of California, Berkeley. He was a fellow at the London School of Economics Department of International Relations from 1971 to 1972, and at the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences at Stanford, California, from 1976 to 1977.

Hamilton has been Museum Professor of Evolutionary Biology at the Museum of Zoology and Biological Sciences, University of Michigan, since 1978.

Axelrod and Hamilton each received a bronze medal and a share of the $5,000 prize. The AAAS-Newcomb Cleveland Prize is awarded annually to the author(s) of a paper published in Science that is considered to be an outstanding contribution to science.

Alpha Sigma Nu National Book Award

Vincent A. Mahler, assistant professor of political science at Loyola University of Chicago, won the 1980 Alpha Sigma National Book Award in the category of physical and social sciences for his book Dependency Approaches to International Political Economy: A Cross-National Study (New York: Columbia University Press, 1980). Two awards are presented each year for the best books by faculty members of Jesuit colleges and universities by the Association of Jesuit Colleges and Universities; they carry a $1,000 prize.

College of the Holy Cross

David L. Schaefer, associate professor of political science at Holy Cross College in Worcester, Massachusetts, is one of three Holy Cross professors who have received one-year National Endowment for the Humanities fellowships for independent study and research.

Schaefer will continue research on a book on the political philosophy of Michel de Montaigne, a 16th century French philosopher and author of The Essays. Schaefer's previous research on this topic has resulted in the publication of six articles. According to Schaefer, Montaigne is one of the chief philosophic architects of the liberal modernity, an understanding of which is essential if the "crisis of the West, as articulated by Alexander Solzhenitsyn in his 1978 Harvard commencement address, is to be comprehended and surmounted."

Schaefer published Justice or Tyranny?: A Critique of John Rawls's 'A Theory of Justice' and edited The New Egalitarianism: Questions and Challenges, both by Kennikat Press, Port Washington, New York, in 1979.

He received his B.A. cum laude in government from Cornell University in 1964 and his M.A. in 1967 and his Ph.D. in 1971, both in political science, from the University of Chicago. He lives with his wife Roberta and two daughters in Worcester.

Southern Illinois University at Carbondale

Members of the Department of Political Science at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale have won the Pi Sigma Alpha "Best Paper Award" at the Southwestern Political Science Association meeting three years in a row. The three most recent winners and their authors have been:

1979: "The Future of the American Party System," by John S. Jackson III and Allan McBride.

1980: "Social Psychological Characteristics and Telephone Interviewer Effectiveness," by Roy E. Miller and David A. Bositis.

1981: "Literature Drops in County Level Political Campaigns," by Roy E. Miller.

American Council of Learned Societies

During 1980-81, the American Council of Learned Societies, in national competitions, awarded two fellowships to professor of political science Richard Ashcraft of the University of California, Los Angeles, for a research project on revolutionary politics and Locke's Two Treatises of Government, and Frances Fox Piven of Boston University for a research project on the patterns of female deviance and the American health system.

Stephen K. White of Virginia Polytechnic and State University received a research fellowship for recent recipients of the Ph.D. for Jurgen Habermas's communicative ethics and its implications for political philosophy.

Rhodes Scholar

Mark N. Kramer, a double major in political science and Slavic languages from Stanford University, has become the University's 42nd Rhodes scholar. He plans to study philosophy, politics and economics at Oxford. He is fluent in Russian and worked as an aide in Senator Edward Kennedy's office during 1979-80. After working as an intern with the Congressional Reference Service, Kramer became interested in arms control and disarmament. He worked closely with Jan Kalicki, Senator Kennedy's top foreign policy adviser, while in Washington.

In Memoriam

Harold W. Chase

Harold W. Chase, professor of political science at the University of Minnesota, died of a heart attack on January 12, 1981. Governed by an exceptional devotion to duty and an enthusiasm for difficult challenges, "Hal" Chase pursued a number of careers, each marked with distinction. The profession has lost a gifted teacher, a conscientious scholar, and a courageous administrator; the nation has lost a brave, forward-looking soldier and a dedicated public servant.

A native of Worcester, Massachusetts, Harold Chase was graduated from the Phillips-Andover Academy (1939) and went on to Princeton University for his undergraduate and advanced degrees (A.B., 1943; M.A., 1948; Ph.D., 1954). He was an assistant professor at the University of Delaware and at Princeton Uni-
