Contributors

Mary H. M. Bach is a student in the School of Pharmacy at the University of Washington, Seattle.

Keith A. Bauer, M.S.W., is a graduate student in the Department of Philosophy/Medical Ethics at the University of Tennessee, Knoxville. His dissertation addresses the ethics and social dimensions of home-based telemedicine, the use of information and communication technologies to deliver healthcare into the homes of patients. Mr. Bauer is currently a fellow at the American Medical Association's Institute for Ethics in Chicago.

Thomas A. Cavanaugh, Ph.D., is Associate Professor in the Department of Philosophy, University of San Francisco, San Francisco, California.

Jean E. Chambers, Ph.D., is Assistant Professor in the Philosophy Department at SUNY Oswego, Oswego, New York. She is currently working on evolutionary feminist ethical theory, a decision-theoretic account of practical rationality, and the political philosophy of energy policy.

Tony Cornford is Senior Lecturer in Information Systems at the London School of Economics and Political Science, London, England. His research interests include the development and implementation of telehealth applications, their place in health policy, and the debate over the means for their evaluation. He is the co-author (with Chrisanthi Avgerou) of Developing Information Systems: Concepts, Issues, and Practice, Macmillan (1998).

Leonard M. Fleck, Ph.D., is Professor of Philosophy and Medical Ethics at the Center for Ethics and Humanities, Michigan State University, East Lansing.

Matti Häyry, Ph.D., is Professor of Philosophy at the University of Political Science at the University of Kuopio, Finland. He has authored eight books on ethics and applied philosophy.

Thomas K. Hazlet, Pharm.D., Dr. P.H., is Assistant Professor in the Pharmaceutical Outcomes Research and Policy Program, School of Pharmacy, University of Washington, Seattle.

Patricia Illingworth, J.D., Ph.D., is a member of the Massachusetts Bar Association and teaches medical and business ethics in the Department of Philosophy and Religion, Northeastern University, Boston, Massachusetts.

Contributors

Kenneth V. Iserson, M.D., M.B.A., is Professor of Surgery (Emergency Medicine), Director of the Program in Bioethics, and Chair of the Bioethics Committee at the University of Arizona College of Medicine, Tucson.

Ela Klecun-Dabrowska is Lecturer in Information Systems at Brunel University in Middlesex, England. She holds a Master's degree in Analysis, Design, and Management of Information Systems from the London School of Economics, where she is currently completing her Ph.D. Her research interests include telehealth, evaluation of information systems, and the application of critical theory in the field of information systems.

Greg Loeben, Ph.D., is the Book Review Editor for CQ and Faculty Coordinator of the Graduate Program in Bioethics at Midwestern University in Glendale, Arizona.

Robert Makus, Ph.D., is Assistant Professor of Philosophy at the University of San Francisco where he teaches existentialism, phenomenology, and the history of history. As a Heideggerian, most of his research focuses on aspects of phenomenological ontology. In addition to being a professional philosopher, Dr. Makus has also become a professional patient after over 25 years of dealing with cancer and its aftermath, and relies on that background for occasional forays into medical ethics.

Christy A. Rentmeester received her M.A. in Bioethics at the Medical College of Wisconsin in 1999 and is continuing her studies in the Philosophy Department at Michigan State University, East Lansing.

David B. Resnik, Ph.D., is Associate Professor of Medical Humanities at the Brody School of Medicine at East Carolina University, Greenville, North Carolina, and Associate Director of the Bioethics Center at University Health Systems of Eastern North Carolina. He is the author of The Ethics of Science: An Introduction, Routledge (1998) and a co-author (with Holly Steinkraus and Pamela Langer) of Human Germ-line Therapy: Scientific, Moral and Political Issues, R.G. Landes (1999).

Pam R. Sailors, Ph.D., is Assistant Professor of Philosophy at Southwest Missouri State University, Springfield. Her research interests are in medical ethics, feminist philosophy, and mental illness and public health.

Judith Schaeffer Young, M.L.S., is the medical librarian at Wills Eye Hospital in Philadelphia. She is responsible for both the Arthur Bedell Memorial Library and the Little Rock Foundation Patient Education Resource Center.