

MODERN AMERICAN HISTORY

Volume 3, Issue 2/3, November 2020

Articles

Prescribing Sound: Willem Van de Wall and the Carceral Origins of American Music Therapy

J. Martin Vest

Before its role in mid-century self-help culture, music therapy gained ground in American prisons and psychiatric institutions 109

“The Miracle of You”: Women’s Sex Education and the Marketing of Kotex

Dan Guadagnolo

How one corporation transformed the “life cycle” into a profitable marketing concept and became an educational authority on women’s reproductive health 133

“The Worst Divorce Case that Ever Happened”: The New York Times Women’s Caucus and Workplace Feminism

Marama Whyte

Behind-the-scenes consciousness raising and organizing laid the groundwork for a landmark class-action sex discrimination lawsuit 153

Watergate, the Bipartisan Struggle for Media Access, and the Growth of Cable Television

Kathryn Cramer Brownell

When live Senate hearings and the dramatic conclusion to a presidency sparked a national conversation about the role of television in politics as well as the power of broadcast networks 175

Below the Fold

Photoarticle

Race and the Territorial Imaginary: Reckoning with the Demographic Cartography of the United States

William Rankin

Maps make strong visual arguments about who counts as truly American—and where they count 199

Q&A

The WRITER'S STUDIO with Richard White

Richard White

The distinguished author discusses writing habits, life with books, and arguments with friends

231

The VISITORS' CORNER with Viet Thanh Nguyen

Viet Thanh Nguyen

The Pulitzer Prize winning novelist reflects on the relationship between fiction and history

241

The Soapbox

No, Afghanistan Is Not Really Vietnam All Over Again

Aaron O'Connell

On the lessons learned, lost, or never learned, from the Vietnam War

251

Into the Stacks

A Double Whammy for the History of Evangelical Protestantism

David A. Hollinger

How could a wholesome religious tradition possibly fuel the political success of Donald J. Trump?

269