

Occupational Therapy. (Occup. Therap. and Rehabil., February, 1931.) Kidner, T. B.

Discussing the utility of this therapy in mental hospitals the author writes: "The programme . . . should be carried on by work demanding progressively graduated effort throughout the patient's institutional life; until he or she is able to engage in pre-industrial work which will lead either to parole and discharge, or to a place of usefulness in the industries and general activities of the hospital for patients who cannot be discharged." Advice is also given to the occupational therapists in tuberculosis, general and orthopædic hospitals.
