

time trainees are looking for a senior registrar post. This may well give S. Wales trainees a 'competitive edge' in the race for jobs.

- (5) The main problem appears to be the extra work involved, and especially the need to write a dissertation around the time one is preparing for the Part 2 MRCPsych. This can be particularly difficult for those who require several attempts at the examination.

Overall, we feel that the benefits of the MSc greatly outweigh the problems. Not everyone completes the MSc, and in this sense it is not 'compulsory'. It provides a good opportunity to get involved in supervised research and to obtain a postgraduate degree.

IAN JONES and GARY SULLIVAN
Gwent Community Health,
National Health Service Trust,
St. Cadoc's Hospital, Lodge Road,
Caerleon, Gwent NP6 1XQ

Psychiatric training in police surgeon work

Sir: I would like to describe an experience of police surgeon casework and suggest that psychiatrists with an interest in Diversion from Custody might do some training with police surgeons.

I surveyed the cases seen over one year as a psychiatric registrar working on a one in six night time police surgeon rota in Ashington, Northumberland. This was supervised by a senior police surgeon and two consultant psychiatrists. Twenty-nine males and four females charged with offences ranging from drunken driving to murder were seen. Eighteen of these individuals had physical injuries and twenty-two were intoxicated with alcohol, drugs or other substance combinations. Two detained persons presented with DSM-III-R manic episodes and another two with adjustment disorders. The work generated by intoxication was substantial and our assessments appeared to make a marked difference on the rate of inappropriate Section 136 cases being taken to the local psychiatric hospital. A major benefit was acquiring an insight into the requirements of diversion from custody from the perspective of the police and forging working relationships with police officers. The police welcomed a psychiatrist as a police surgeon.

There are insufficient police surgeon recruits and the best way to train in the diversion from custody of mental disordered offenders is still being evaluated. There may be a case for trainee psychiatrists interested in becoming diversion from custody consultants joining the ranks of police surgeons. This should be at registrar or senior registrar level, with supervision from a consultant psychiatrist as well as incorporating police surgeon training.

STEPHEN D. MARTIN
St Luke's Hospital, Middlesbrough TS4 3AF

Stravinsky, Hogarth and Bedlam

Sir: I read the article on Stravinsky and the Rake's Progress by Paul Crichton (Psychiatric Bulletin, August 1995, 19, 196-498) with interest, and incredulity. The Hollywood-style psychobiography of the composer in his late fifties shows some of the pitfalls and the pointlessness of such activity. Crichton's account of the years leading up to the opera's composition is misleading. He states that "... by 1947 Stravinsky's career was totally becalmed ... he had written a couple of untempestuous orchestral pieces ... He was depressed by the lack of originality ...". In fact, between his arrival in California in May 1940 and his encounter with the Hogarth print in May 1947 Stravinsky completed the Symphony in C (1940) and composed the following works: Tango (1940), Dances Concertantes (1942), Circus Polka (1942), Four Norwegian Moods (1942), Ode (1943), Babel (1944), Scherzo à la Russe (1944), Scènes de Ballet (1944), Sonata (1944), Elegy (1944), Symphony in Three Movements (1945), Ebony Concerto (1945) Concerto in D (1946), Orpheus (1947) and most of the Mass (1948) (White, 1979). These works all received their premières during this period and the list contains some of the most important and enjoyable music of Stravinsky's later years.

There is no evidence from contemporary memoirs that Stravinsky was 'depressed' and Robert Craft's assassination of the composer's character is presented out of context. One might wonder whether Craft's analysis was objective since in the same chapter he admits that "... our nervous systems and temperaments were virtually the same"; and later, "Stravinsky's personality was overwhelming and dominating ... and I had to seek refuge from it to preserve my identity" (Craft, 1992). As if by way of confirmation of Stravinsky's instability Crichton points out that he knew de Falla, Satie and Nijinsky - all of whom were rated as highly disturbed by Felix Post (1994). What relevance has this to Stravinsky's mental state in the 1940s?

Perhaps the final moral of the Rake's Progress (Auden & Kalman, 1951) itself should serve as a warning:

"For idle hands,
And hearts and minds,
The Devil finds,
A work to do,
A work, dear Sir, fair Madam,
For you and you".