

Notes

1 Opera as process

1. For the presence of opera productions in major European urban centers, see Daniel Heartz, Music in European Capitals: The Galant Style, 1720–1780 (New York: Norton, 2003), and William Weber, “Opera and the Cultural Authority of the Capital City,” in Victoria Johnson, Jane F. Fulcher, and Thomas Ertman (eds.), Opera and Society in Italy and France from Monteverdi to Bourdieu (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2007), 160–80; on the dissemination of opera in small and holiday towns, see Franco Piperno, “State and Market, Production and Style: An Interdisciplinary Approach to Eighteenth-Century Italian Opera History,” in Opera and Society, 140–3. On Eszterháza, see Caryl Clark, “Haydn in the Theater: The Operas,” in Caryl Clark (ed.), The Cambridge Companion to Haydn (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2005), 176–99.

5. On the complex interplay of the various operatic domains in eighteenth-century opera, see James Webster, “Mozart’s Operas and the Myth of Musical Unity,” COJ 2/2 (1990), 197–218. Because modern mise-en-scène of eighteenth-century operas redirects the political message or even adds new meaning to the original text, modern opera productions ought to be interpreted as new texts, according to David J. Levin, Unsettling Opera: Staging Mozart, Verdi, Wagner, and Zemlinsky (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2007).
6. Overviews of the theory and criticism of opera in Italy are offered by Renato Di Benedetto, “Politics and Polemics,” in Lorenzo Bianconi and Giorgio Pestelli (eds.), Opera in Theory and Practice, Image and Myth, trans. Kenneth Chalmers (Chicago and London: University of Chicago Press, 2003), 1–71; Elvidio Surian, A Checklist of Writings on 18th-Century French and Italian Opera (Excluding Mozart) (Hackensack: Boonin, 1970); and Enrico Fubini, History of Music Aesthetics, trans. Michael Hatwell (London: Macmillan, 1990). Relevant passages concerning operatic polemics can be read in Piero Weiss (ed.), Opera: A History in Documents (Oxford and New York: Oxford University Press, 2002).
7. Benedetto Marcello, Il teatro alla moda, o sia metodo sicuro, e facile per ben comporre, & eseguire l’opere Italiane in Musica all’uso moderno ... (Venice: Aldaviva Licante, 1720; repr. Milan: Il Polifilo, 2006). A comprehensive overview of the Italian operatic production system and of the professional agents involved is Lorenzo Bianconi and Giorgio Pestelli (eds.), Opera Production and its Resources, trans. Lydia G. Cochrane (Chicago: University of Chicago, 1998).

10. Heartz, Music in European Capitals, 309–21. Strohm, Dramma per musica, 78. “Son qual nave agitata” was published as the first piece in The favourite Songs in the Opera call’d “Artaseres” by Signr. Hasse (London: Walsh, [1734 or later]), 2–5. A performance of “Son qual nave agitata” appears in the controversial 1994 movie Farinelli directed by Gerard Corbiau.
11. Martha Feldman, Opera as Sovereignty: Transforming Myths in Eighteenth-Century Italy (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2007), 42–5, 66; the analysis of Farinelli’s aria transmitted in the two-stave melody and basso continuo is at pp. 72–80. An analysis of Hasse’s Artaserse is offered in a separate chapter (chapter 6), pp. 248–55. For the concept of opera as ritualized action, see especially pp. 1–3, 13, 18, 83.

14. Roger Parker, Remaking the Song: Operatic Visions and Revisions from Handel to Berio (Berkeley, Los Angeles, and London: University of California Press, 2006), 5–11, 42–66. The arias for the Ferrarese are “Un moto di gioria,” substituting “Venite inginocchiatevi” in Act 2, and “Al disio di chi t’adora,” replacing “Deh vieni, non tardar” in Act 4.

17. Goldoni gives slightly different accounts of this episode in his Mémoires (Paris: Duchesne, 1787), vol. 1, chapter 36, and in his Prefazione alle commedie del dottore Carlo Goldoni avvocato veneto (Venice: Bettinelli, 1750). 21. On the renaissance of Vivaldi’s operas during our era, see Frédéric Dalaméa, “La redécouverte du théâtre vivaldien: état des lieux et perspectives,” ISV 19 (1998), 45–72. On the sources of Vivaldi’s operas, see Rinaldi, Il teatro musicale di Antonio Vivaldi, 7–12. The entire collection of Vivaldi’s operas at the library of Turin (funds Foà and Giordano) is in the process of being recorded by Opus 111 (Naïve records). Vivaldi’s operas will be published soon in critical edition as a joint effort by Casa Ricordi and the Istituto Italiano Antonio Vivaldi. I am grateful to the director of the IIAV, Francesco Fanna, for this information.
22. Cross, The Late Operas of Antonio Vivaldi, 5–6, 25; Glixon, Inventing the Business of Opera, 5. A chapter on this opera appears in a recent publication on Vivaldi’s operas that I could not consult in time: Reinhard Strohm, The Operas of Antonio Vivaldi, 2 vols. (Florence: Olschki, 2008).
23. The argomento appears in [Alvise Giusti], Motezuma: dramma per musica da rappresentarsi nel teatro di Sant’Angelo nell’Autunno dell’Anno 1733 (Venice: Marino Rossetti, 1733), 2–3. The recording is by Il complesso barocco, conducted by Alan Curtis, Archiv Productions (Deutsche Grammophon), B0006490-02 (3 compact discs), 2006. I am grateful to Alan Curtis for letting me see the reconstructions of missing or fragmentary parts of the original score that he used for the recording. 30. On the importance of the operatic activities in Berlin during Algarotti’s residence at the court of Frederick the Great, see Annalisa Bini’s introduction to Francesco Algarotti, Saggio sopra l’opera in musica: le edizioni di Venezia (1755) e di Livorno (1763), ed. Annalisa Bini (Lucca: LIM, 1989), vii–liv. I base my account of reformed opera as fostered by Algarotti primarily on the 1755 Venice edition. The most compelling study of the relevance of Berlin's production for the reform of opera is by Marita Petzoldt McClymonds, "Frederick the Great, Algarotti, Graun, and the Origins of 18th-Century Operatic Innovations," uncut draft version of a shorter paper read at the meeting of the International Musicological Society, Leuven, 2002. I am grateful to Marita McClymonds for generously letting me read this paper prior to its publication.

2 Aria as drama

1. Reinhard Strohm, Dramma per musica: Italian Opera Seria of the Eighteenth Century (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1997), introduction.
2. James Parakilas, "Mozart's Tito and the Music of Rhetorical Strategy" (Ph.D. diss., Cornell University, 1979); Martha Feldman, Opera as Sovereignty: Transforming Myths in Eighteenth-Century Italy (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2007), 63–9.
3. Marita McClymonds, "Aria," Grove Opera, vol. 1, 171. See chapter 1 in this volume.
4. I distinguish "drama" from "dramaturgy," using the latter to designate aspects of construction and stagecraft, for example the employment of entrances and exits, the distinction between soliloquies and speeches made to other characters, etc.
5. Winton Dean, Handel and the Opera Seria (Berkeley: University of California Press, 1969), 18–23, 156–77; Mary Hunter, "Text, Music, and Drama in Haydn's Italian Opera Arias: Four Case Studies," JM 7 (1989), 30.
6. The statistics in this paragraph are taken from Strohm, Dramma, 12–13; and Strohm,

Die italienische Oper im 18. Jahrhundert (Wilhelmshaven: Heinrichshofen, 1979), 12.

7. In Italy alone, there were on average 80 to 100 productions per year, or close to 10,000 during the century. The average number of arias per opera was probably between 25 and 30. This does not imply a total of 250,000 or 300,000 arias, however, because many operas were produced in several different venues, and arias were frequently "recycled"; still, the number was presumably in the six figures.
8. Dorothea Link, "Vienna's Private Theatrical and Musical Life, 1783–92, as Reported by Count Karl Zinzendorf," JRMA 122 (1997), 205–57. On Benucci as star, see Daniel Heartz, Mozart's Operas, ed. Thomas Bauman (Berkeley: University of California Press, 1990), 145–8. Mozart's praise of Benucci as Figaro, reported by Michael Kelly, is too well known to require comment here (it is quoted by Heartz, 147–8).

9. In the buffa context, compare Daniel Heartz, "When Mozart Revises: Guglielmo in Così," in Stanley Sadie (ed.), Wolfgang Amadè Mozart: Essays on His Life and His Music (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1996), 155–61; Mary Hunter, The Culture of Opera Buffa in Mozart's Vienna: A Poetics of Entertainment (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1999), 42–51, 103–9.

10. Daniela Goldin, "Per una morfologia dell'aria metastasiana," in Maria Teresa Muraro (ed.), Metastasio e il mondo musicale (Florence: Olschki, 1986), 13–37.

11. This conceit had precedents reaching back to Tasso; see Bruce Alan Brown, W. A. Mozart: "Così fan tutte" (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1995), 65–6.

12. This paragraph and the following two summarize James Webster, "The Analysis of Mozart's Arias," in Cliff Eisen (ed.), Mozart Studies (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1991), 130–40 (with many examples and further references).

13. In the rhyme-schemes in this chapter, piano lines are shown in normal type (e.g., in "Come scoglio" above, "a" and "b"), tronco in bold-face ("c").

14. On this point, see Wye Jamison Allanbrook, Rhythmic Gesture in Mozart: "Le nozze di Figaro" and "Don Giovanni" (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1984), 23–5, 152–3, 187–90 et passim; Reinhard Strohm, "Zur Metrik in Haydns und Anfossis La vera costanza," in Eva Badura-Skoda (ed.), Joseph Haydn: Bericht über den Internationalen Joseph Haydn Kongress Wien ... 1982 (Munich: Henle, 1986), 279–94. The qualification "actual" takes account of

- variations in metrical notation: for example, depending on the tempo, harmonic rhythm, and speed of declamation, 6/8 or 4/4 can represent either one “actual” measure or two (in the latter case,  $2 \times 3/8$  or  $2 \times 2/4$ ); conversely, 3/8 or 2/4 one “actual” measure or only half of one; and so forth.

  32. See, for example, McClymonds, “Aria,” 173.
  33. See, for example, Feldman, Opera and Sovereignty, 69–95.
  34. In the operatic context, Ratner’s term “two-reprise form” (Classic Music, chapter 13) is preferable to “binary form.”
  35. On sonata-form arias, see Hunter, “Haydn’s Aria Forms,” parts III–IV; on the tonal return section (Hunter’s term) see also Webster, “Arias,” 118–19; Platoff, “Buffa Aria,” 107–11, 117–20.
  36. Facsimile in The Librettos of Handel’s Operas, ed. Ellen Harris, 13 vols. (New York: Garland, 1989), vol. 1. In the text below, the orthography and punctuation have been modernized; all other details according to the original.
  37. Although this line has nine syllables, it can be read as a poetic license in otonario. First, in this meter, the primary accents ordinarily fall on the third and seventh syllables (fifth and second from the final); compare lines 2–4. In line 1, the first primary accent also falls on the fifth syllable from the final (“voi”); “Pensieri” thus constitutes (as it were) a three-syllable “upbeat,” in place of the usual two syllables. Secondly, as is obvious from its placement as a detached initial line and its repetition, the word “Pensieri” is rhetorically and syntactically separable (and is so treated by Handel).

38. Lines 2–4 according to the musical sources. In the libretto they read: “Numi eterni, ch’l ciel reggete [b] / I miei voti raccogliete, [b] / La mia speme secondate [a]” (Eternal gods, who rule the heavens, / Take up my vows, / Aid my hope).
39. The aria has points of contact with Medea’s aria “Morirò” in Teseo; see the extracts in Dean, Handel, 84–5.
40. Troping the well-known comment of Beethoven about Handel reported by Ignaz von Seyfried: Friedrich Kerst, Die Erinnerungen an Beethoven, 2 vols. (Stuttgart: Hoffmann, 1913), vol. 1, 83; trans. O. G. Sonneck, Beethoven: Impressions by his Contemporaries (New York: Schirmer, 1926), 44.
41. The “consequent” of the interruption cannot begin before m. 44, because there is no tonic. (To be sure, one could show the background 5 over an “auxiliary” middleground cadence from m. 35 to 44, V<sup>6</sup>/iv–V–i, but this would still delay the entire background descent to the last two measures.)
42. This has nothing to do with the conventional da capo within an aria, which the libretto in fact indicates earlier, in the usual location and manner.
43. In performance the initial note of m. 90 is sung as G, not D.
44. On this plot-type, see Hunter, “‘Pamela’: The Offspring of Richardson’s Heroine in Eighteenth-Century Opera,” Mosaic 18 (1985), 61–76; Stefano Castelvecchi, “Sentimental Opera: The Emergence of a Genre, 1760–1790” (Ph.D. diss., University of Chicago, 1996); Jessica Waldoff, “Sentiment and Sensibility in La vera costanza,” in W. Dean Sutcliffe (ed.), Haydn Studies (Cambridge University Press, 1998), 70–119. - 3 Ensembles and finales
1. For a consideration of the finale in Singspiel, see chapter 10 in this volume.
2. Wye Jamison Allanbrook mounts a multifaceted defense of this denouement in Rhythmic Gesture in Mozart: “Le nozze di Figaro” and “Don Giovanni” (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1983), 322–5, and in “Mozart’s Happy Endings: A New Look at the ‘Convention’ of the ‘Lieto fine’,” MJ (1984–5), 1–5. See also two companion essays in Mary Hunter and James Webster (eds.), Opera Buffa in Mozart’s Vienna: Michael R. Robinson, “The Alternative Endings of Mozart’s Don Giovanni,” 261–85; and Jessica Waldoff, “Don Giovanni: Recognition Denied,” 286–307. The latter published also as chapter 5 of her Recognition in Mozart’s Operas (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2006).

4. Ibid., 157.
5. Piero Weiss, “Opera buffa,” § 2, in Grove Opera, vol. 3, 686.
6. Daniel Heartz discusses the origins of the finale in two articles: “The Creation of the Buffo Finale in Italian Opera,” PRMA 104 (1977–8), 67–78; and “Vis comica: Goldoni, Galuppi and L’arcadia in Brenta (Venice 1949),” in Maria Teresa Muraro (ed.), Venezia e il melodrama nel settecento, vol. 2 (Florence: Olschki, 1981), 33–73. Both reprinted in Heartz, From Garrick to Gluck: Essays on Opera in the Age of Enlightenment, ed. John A. Rice (New York: Pendragon, 2004).
7. Thomas Bauman, “The Eighteenth Century: Comic Opera,” in Roger Parker (ed.), The Oxford Illustrated History of Opera (Oxford and New York: Oxford University Press, 1994), 90.
8. On roles and genre designations in opera buffa see chapter 5 in this volume.
9. Of the numerous writings on this finale, the following are especially recommended – the first three featuring graphic tables: Tim Carter, W. A. Mozart: “Le nozze di Figaro” (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1987), Table 3, p. 86; John Platoff, “Tonal Organization in ‘Buffo’ Finales and the Act II Finale of Le nozze di Figaro,” ML 72/3 (1991), 387–403 (Table 1, p. 388); Andrew Steptoe, The Mozart-Da Ponte Operas (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1988), Table 4, pp. 174–5; Allanbrook, Rhythmic Gesture in Mozart, 119–36; and Carolyn Abbate and Roger Parker, “Dismembering Mozart,” COJ 2/1 (1990), 187–95.
10. For instance, see John Platoff, “Music and Drama in the Opera Buffa Finale: Mozart and his Contemporaries in Vienna” (Ph.D. dissertation, University of Pennsylvania, 1984); Daniel Heartz, Mozart’s Operas, ed. with contributing essays by Thomas Bauman (Berkeley: University of California Press, 1991); Hunter and Webster, Opera Buffa in

- Mozart's Vienna and Hunter, The Culture of Opera Buffa* (see notes 2 and 3 above).
11. Da Ponte's description is preserved in two sources, which transmit slightly different versions: the English-language Extract (1819), and the more familiar Italian Memoirs (1823), as cited here in Memoirs of Lorenzo Da Ponte, trans. Elizabeth Abbott (ed.) and annotated by Arthur Livingston (New York: Orion, 1959), 59–60. Only the extract refers to specific ranks of singers in the company (e.g., primo buffo, prima donna, etc.), while his Memoirs alone record that “the whole power of the drama is drawn [or pinched] together,” alluding to the escalating dramatic conflicts that ultimately led to the stretta.

7 Orchestra and voice in eighteenth-century Italian opera

- I want to thank several people for their assistance with this project. Dan Heartz gave advice about the scope and analytical approach. Marita McClymonds helped date Jommelli scores. Dale Monson helped date Galuppi scores. Roland Schmidt-Hensel provided a copy of a recitative by Hasse.
1. See John Spitzer and Neal Zaslaw, The Birth of the Orchestra – History of an Institution, 1650–1815 (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2004), 137–42.
  2. Tabulations of continuo arias versus arias accompanied by the orchestra in operas by Scarlatti, Vivaldi and Handel show the proportion of accompanied arias increasing steadily over time. See Michael Collins, "L'orchestra nelle opere teatrali di Vivaldi," in Antonio Fanna and Giovanni Morelli (eds.), NSV 1 (1988), 306.
  3. See Eric Reimer, Opera Seria and the Evolution of Classical Style, 1755–1772 (Ann Arbor: UMI, 1984), chapter 4. For a discussion of the growing role of the clarinet see Anthony R. DelDonna, "A Documentary History of the Clarinet," SM 37/1 (2008), forthcoming.
  4. Several composers – among them Cavalli, Purcell, Desmarests, Graupner and Piccinni – composed Dido operas to texts by librettists other than Metastasio.
  5. Domenico Sarri, Didone abbandonata, I-Nc Rari 18.4.2.
  6. The example comes from the 1763, Milan version of Didone abbandonata (US-Wc

- M1500.T76 D4). Traetta had composed an earlier version of Didone in 1757 for Venice.
7. Sacchini wrote this aria for the pasticcio Didone that Venanzio Rauzzini put together at the King's Theatre in London in 1775. Rauzzini, Mortellari and Giardini also contributed arias to the production. Examples 7.3a–b are from Antonio Sacchini, Didone abbandonata, US-Wc, M1500.R242 D4. Example 7.4 is Domenico Sarri, Didone abbandonata, I-Nc Rari 18.4.2.
  8. Pier Francesco Tosi, Opinioni de' cantori antichi e moderni di Pier Francesco Tosi con note ed esempi di Luigi Leonesi [1723] (Naples, 1904; rpt. Bologna: Biblioteca Musica Bononiensis, 1985), 93; trans. J. E. Galliard as Observations on the Florid Song ([London], 1742; rpt. London, 1987), 116.
  9. Jean-Jacques Rousseau, Lettre sur la musique française (1753); rpt. in Jean-Jacques Rousseau, Écrits sur la musique: avec des notes, éclaircissements historiques, etc. (Paris: Stock, 1979), 283–4.
  10. Baldasarre Galuppi, Didone abbandonata, P-La, 44-VI-66-8. Composed for Naples in 1764, this was Galuppi's second setting of the opera. He wrote an earlier version for Modena in 1740.
  11. Examples 7.6a–c are based on Tommaso Traetta, Didone abbandonata, US-Wc, M1500.T76 D4.
  12. Examples 7.7a–b are based on Giovanni Paisiello, Didone abbandonata, I-Nc Rari 16.8.36-37.
  13. David Perez, Didone abbandonata, US-Wc M1500.P411 D4.
  14. Jommelli set Didone abbandonata four times: Rome, 1747; Vienna, 1749; Stuttgart, 1763; Stuttgart, 1777. The example comes from the Vienna version, copy in F-Pn, D6234-36.
  15. Examples 7.10a–b are from Leonardo Vinci, Didone abbandonata, US-Cn VM 1500. V77d.
  16. Vinci's setting of this passage was admired and influential. When Sarri's Didone was revived in Naples in 1730, "E soffrìo" was rewritten to provide orchestral accompaniment from the very beginning of the recitative. See I-Nc Rari 32.2.20. Daniel Heartz discusses Vinci's Didone at length in Music in European Capitals, The Galant Style, 1720–1780 (New York: Norton, 2003), 89–90.
  17. Jean-Jacques Rousseau, Dictionnaire de musique (Paris, 1768), 403–4. Rousseau was not the first to make the distinction between two styles of orchestral recitative. Scheibe, in his Critischer Musikus (1745), says that an orchestra can accompany recitative in two manners: "First the instruments [can]

- accompany the voice very softly and without calling attention to themselves; second the instruments [can] assert themselves now and then in a forceful way between the recitative speech.” Johann Adolf Scheibe, Critischer Musikus (Leipzig, 1745), 744.
18. A contemporary English translation of Rousseau’s Dictionary by William Waring (1779) translates récitatif accompagné as “accompanied recitative,” but récitatif obligé as “confined recitative,” which conveys little in modern English.
  19. Rousseau, Dictionnaire de musique, 404.
  20. The example comes from Hasse’s Berlin, 1752 version of Didone. Hasse had set Metastasio’s libretto twice before: Hubertusburg, 1742 and Naples, 1744.
  21. Examples 7.11a–b are from Johann Adolf Hasse, Didone abbandonata, D-B, Mus. Ms. 9549/1.
  22. Pietro Metastasio, Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the Abbate Metastasio, ed. and trans. Charles Burney (London, 1796), vol. 1, 326. Hasse and Metastasio were friends. In the letter Metastasio gives the composer pointers about Attilio Regolo, which Hasse was setting for Dresden.
  23. This example comes from the earlier of Piccinni’s two Dido operas. The first was in Italian on Metastasio’s libretto (Rome, 1770), the second in French on a libretto by Marmontel (Paris, 1783). The source is Niccolò Piccinni, Didone abbandonata, US-WC, M1500.P58 D42.

- ### 8 To look again (at Don Giovanni)
1. Mozart and Da Ponte, Don Giovanni, Act 2, sc. 11, duet Leporello–Don Giovanni “O statua gentilissima.” References to the libretto (hereafter abbreviated as L) are based on Eduardo Rescigno (ed.), Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart “Don Giovanni.” Libretto di Lorenzo Da Ponte (Milan: Ricordi, 1993). All translations are mine.
  2. For a synthetic but vivid account of the different staging practices, see Roger Savage, “The Staging of Opera,” in Roger Parker (ed.), The Oxford Illustrated History of Opera (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1994), 350–420.
  3. For one of the most interesting accounts of opera iconography, see Mercedes Viale Ferrero, “Stage and Set,” in Lorenzo Bianconi and Giorgio Pestelli (eds.), Opera on Stage, trans. Kate Singleton (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2002).
  4. Mozart, Don Giovanni (Kassel: Bärenreiter, 1976), 377, mm. 60–5. A stage direction in the autograph score reads: “[Leporello] imita la statua”; “la statua china qui la testa.” “He imitates the statue”; “the statue at this point bows its head.”
  5. The reference here is to J. L. Austin’s definition of “performatives” as those verbal utterances that “do something,” that are themselves actions. The famous example of performative is the “I do” uttered during a wedding ceremony. J. L. Austin, How To Do Things With Words, ed. J. O. Urmson and Marina Sbisà, 2nd edn (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1975).

23. Several musicological contributions have commented on Don Giovanni’s uncanny lack of a musical idiom, as evidenced by his disquieting tendency to mimic others. See for instance the two classic entries in the bibliography of Mozart operas in English: Joseph Kerman, Opera as Drama, rev. edn (Berkeley: University California Press, 1988), and Wye Allanbrook, Rhythmic Gesture in Mozart. “Le Nozze di Figaro” & “Don Giovanni” (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1983). - The presence of bird song is twice indicated in the libretto in Act 1, sc. 3: “Man höret den Gesang der Vögel” (“One hears the sound of birds”) and shortly thereafter “Die Vögel singen von neuem” (“The birds sing anew”). Christian Felix Weisse, Komische Opern (Karlsruhe: Schmieder, 1778), vol. 1, 170–1. Since these indications occur within the spoken dialogue, the orchestra is not involved in the creation of bird song. It is unclear precisely how these sounds were produced on stage.

  6. See, for example, the case of the singer Regina Mingotti, the composer Giovanni Lampugnani, and the impresario Francesco Vanneschi exposed in Regina Mingotti, An Appeal to the Public (London: for the Author, [1755]). Mingotti’s pamphlet recounts in detail negotiations between herself and Vanneschi, and her substitution of arias she had brought with her, because Vanneschi thought they were better than those provided by Lampugnani, the house composer.
  7. These were few enough; in 1796, the King’s Theatre clearly felt it to be an unusual enough circumstance to put “The music, composed, here, by Bianchi” as a draw-card on the title-page of Antigona.

2. The only one of these which survives complete, La Spinalba ovvero il vecchio matto (1739), libretto by an unknown author, was successfully revived in the twentieth century in Lisbon, Badajoz, Paris, Rome, and London. The lightly sentimental style of several arias is typical of the period of Vinci and Pergolesi. The Philips LP record 839.710/12, [1968] is no longer available; there is, however, a modern CD recording of Almeida’s beautiful oratorio, La Giuditta (premiered in Rome in 1726), conducted by René Jacobs and produced by Harmonia Mundi, 901411.12 (two compact discs), 1992.
3. Nevertheless, John V seems to have had thoughts of building a court theater, ordering plans for it from Francesco Galli-Bibiena in Rome, as documented by Angela Delaforce, Art and Patronage in Eighteenth-Century Portugal (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2002), 283 and 445, n. 11.

5. See the edition of the incompletely preserved music in Alessandro Scarlatti, L'Eraclea, ed. Donald J. Grout (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1974), which includes a facsimile of the libretto by Silvio Stampiglia, L'Eraclea dramma per musica ... (Naples: Parrino and Mutio, 1700).
6. The extant score (E-Mn, MS M-2247) has the incomplete music for the loa followed by the music of Act 1 in a separate hand (the music of Act 2 appears to be lost). The attribution of the loa's music to Sequeyra is given in the printed libretto, f. 11; the composer of Act 1 is unknown.
7. La Partenope Fiesta, que se hizo en el Real Palacio de México el día de San Phelipe, por los años del Rey nuestro Señor Don Phelipe V (que Dios guarde) ... (Mexico: de Ribera, [n.d.]). There are two copies of this undated libretto, one in Mex-Mn and the other at Brown University.

9. Stampiglia, La Partenope: dramma per musica ... (Naples: Parrino and Mutio, 1699). Many thanks to Paula D. Matthews of Princeton University for providing speedy access to a film of this libretto and to Dr. Dinko Fabris for kindly sharing his copy of the Mancia score.
10. The title-page states in contradictory fashion that the opera was "the day of Saint Philip for the birthday of the King our Lord."

- Saint Philip was celebrated at the beginning of May in this period (May 1), though the reference to the “birthday of our King” points to Philip V’s birthday (December 19) as the date of performance. The publication date is also unknown, though scholars have assumed 1711 as the publication date because it is given (without documentary support) in José Mariano Beristáin de Souza, Biblioteca hispanoamericana setentrional (Mexico, 1898), vol. 3, 325. The publishing house named on the title-page, “Herederos de la Viuda de Miguel de Ribera,” was active in the period 1714–32, according to the kind information of Ken Ward, Curator of Latin American Books, the John Carter Brown Library at Brown University, whose advice is gratefully acknowledged here.

21. The plot is based in the episode at New Carthage (Cartagena) in Spain, from Livy 26.50, called popularly the “Continence of Scipio.” Ferreira’s opera thus can be added to the group of opere serie with libretti produced on this campaign, including Antonio Salvi’s Publio Cornelio Scipione (produced Florence or Pratolino, 1704); Zeno’s Scipione nelle Spagne (performed for the Archduke Charles in Barcelona, 1710), and Piovene’s Publio Cornelio Scipione (Venice 1712). All of these libretti carried political implications relevant to the War of the Spanish Succession. See Bombi, “El mayor triunfo de la mayor guerra,” and Robert C.
