

MODERN AMERICAN HISTORY

Volume 3, Issue 1, March 2020

Articles

Ten-Cent Ideology: Donald Duck Comic Books and the U.S. Challenge to Modernization

Daniel Immerwahr

One of the most widely read authors after World War II teaches Steven Spielberg, George Lucas, and other Americans to think differently about the Global South 1

J. William Fulbright, the Contested Legacies of the American Revolution, and the War in Vietnam

Candace Sobers

When and why reverence for the United States' own revolutionary heritage did not translate into sympathy for the revolutionary aspirations of others 27

Expanding the Thin Blue Line: Resident Patrols and Private Security in Late Twentieth-Century New York

Benjamin Holtzman

Residents reimagine their responses to crime in the city's low-income neighborhoods and business districts alike 47

Below the Fold

The Soapbox

Why Religion Is Hard For Historians (and How It Can Be Easier)

Kathryn Lofton

Reflections on a fraught but essential category for the study of the past 69

Take Three: The Bombing of the USS Panay
One forgotten crisis. Three different perspectives

The Longer History of Imperial Incidents on the Yangtze
Zach Fredman 87

Capitalist Collisions in the Pacific
Kevin Y. Kim 93

A View from Beale Street
Yuichiro Onishi 99

Into the Stacks

The Politics of Happiness
Susan J. Matt
Histories of a feeling at odds with contentment and the acceptance of limits 103