

Retraction

Cite this article: Yu B, Steptoe A, Chen Y, Jia X (2024). WITHDRAWAL – Social isolation, rather than loneliness, is associated with cognitive decline in older adults: the China Health and Retirement Longitudinal Study. Psychological Medicine 54, 4467. <https://doi.org/10.1017/S0033291724002782>

First published online: 26 November 2024

WITHDRAWAL – Social isolation, rather than loneliness, is associated with cognitive decline in older adults: the China Health and Retirement Longitudinal Study

Bin Yu¹, Andrew Steptoe², Yongjie Chen³ and Xiaohua Jia^{4,5}

¹Institute of Psychology, Tianjin Medical University, Tianjin, China; ²Department of Behavioural Science and Health, University College London, London, UK; ³Department of Epidemiology and Statistics, School of Public Health, Tianjin Medical University, Tianjin, China; ⁴Department of Ultrasound, General Hospital of People's Liberation Army, Beijing, China and ⁵Key Laboratory of Molecular Imaging of Chinese Academy of Sciences, Institute of Automation, Chinese Academy of Sciences, Beijing, China

doi.org/10.1017/S0033291720001026, Published online by Cambridge University Press: 22 January 2021

Due to an error by the publisher, this article was accidentally published twice in Psychological Medicine. The duplicate version of the article has been withdrawn. The original published article and its content are not affected by this withdrawal, and there are no ethical or integrity concerns regarding the original published article. The publisher apologises to the author for the technical error.

The original published article can be accessed here and cited as the following:

Yu B, Steptoe A, Chen Y, Jia X. Social isolation, rather than loneliness, is associated with cognitive decline in older adults: the China Health and Retirement Longitudinal Study. Psychological Medicine. 2021;51(14):2414–2421. doi:10.1017/S0033291720001014

Cambridge University Press