

CONTRIBUTORS

JEFFREY BROOKS is professor of history at the Johns Hopkins University. He is author of When Russia Learned to Read: Literacy and Popular Literature, 1861–1917 (Princeton University Press, 1985); Thank You, Comrade Stalin! Soviet Public Culture from Revolution to Cold War (Princeton University Press, 2000); and, with Georgiy Chernyavskiy, Lenin and the Making of the Soviet State: A Brief History with Documents (Palgrave, 2006); as well as many essays on Russian culture and politics.

BORIS DRALYUK is lecturer in Russian at the University of St. Andrews, Scotland. He is the author of Western Crime Fiction Goes East: The Russian Pinkerton Craze 1907–1934 (Brill, 2012), has translated and cotranslated several volumes of poetry and prose from Russian and Polish, and is coeditor, with Robert Chandler and Irina Mashinski, of The Penguin Book of Russian Poetry (Penguin, 2015).

JACOB EMERY teaches Slavic and comparative literature at Indiana University Bloomington. His recent and forthcoming publications include a book on metaphorical kinships in Russian modernism (forthcoming from Northern Illinois University Press) and the essays “Sigizmund Krzhizhanovsky’s Poetics of Passivity,” Russian Review (forthcoming), and “Danilo Kiš’s Metafictional Genealogies,” Slavic and East European Journal 59, no. 3 (Fall 2015). His current projects include monographs on clone fiction and mise en abyme.

MADIGAN FICHTER is a historian of eastern Europe and the Balkans. She previously held a position as visiting assistant professor at New York University’s Center for European and Mediterranean Studies; she is now an assistant professor at Holy Family University and is working on a book about the counter-culture and student opposition movements in the socialist Balkans in the 1960s and 1970s.

LUMINITA GATEJEL holds a PhD in history from the University of Tübingen, Germany. Since 2011, she has been a researcher at the Institute for East and South East European Studies in Regensburg, Germany. Her book, Warten, hoffen und endlich fahren: Auto und Sozialismus in der Sowjetunion, in Rumänien und der DDR (1956–1989/91), was published by Campus Verlag in 2014.

MARY A. NICHOLAS is associate professor of Russian in the Department of Modern Languages and Literatures at Lehigh University. She has published extensively on Russian prose, poetry, and the visual arts. The author of Writers at Work: Russian Production Novels and the Construction of Soviet Culture (Bucknell University Press, 2010), she is currently completing a monograph on the use of written text in late Soviet pictorial art titled Words Worth a Thousand Pictures: Moscow Conceptualism and the (Post)Conceptual Text.

EGLÉ RINDZEVIČIŪTĒ is a lecturer in sociology and criminology at Kingston University, London, UK. She is the author of Constructing Soviet Cultural Slavic Review 75, no. 1 (Spring 2016)

Policy: Cybernetics and Governance in Lithuania after World War II (Linköping University Press, 2008); The Power of Systems: How Policy Sciences Opened Up the Cold War World (Cornell University Press, forthcoming); and A Struggle for the Long Term in Transnational Science and Politics: Forging the Future (Routledge, 2015), co-edited with Jenny Andersson. Her current work involves historical sociology of scientific governance.