WELCH'S GRAPE JUICE: FROM CORPORATION TO COOPERATIVE

by William Chazanof

In 1869 a teetotaling Methodist zealot discovered a non-alcoholic sacramental "wine", then marketed the product of his kitchen industry into a nationally known commodity. The Welch Grape Juice Company—now Welch Foods, Inc.—is frequently cited for its unusual financial history and company structure. Jacob M. Kaplan, a successful molasses entrepreneur, purchased the privately owned company in 1945. His conversion of Welch's to a grower-owned co-operative is unprecedented in American business history. However, Welch's has always been an uncommon operation—pioneering many of today's best business and employment practices. This is the story of a remarkable company and its leaders; particularly Charles E. Welch, son of the founder and innovative marketer, and Jacob M. Kaplan, the organizational and financial wizard who made Welch's into one of the most successful businesses of its kind.

ALEXANDER BRYAN JOHNSON: PHILOSOPHICAL BANKER

by Charles L. Todd and Robert Sonkin

This is the story of an American Renaissance man who came to the Mohawk Valley from England as a boy of 15 in 1801, married the granddaughter of John Adams, made a fortune as an upstate banker, invested in real estate and glass factories, and in his spare time wrote ten books. His books on linguistics were ahead of their time, and his work on economics, printed in 1814, anticipated many of the theories of Veblen and Keynes. Albert Einstein called him a "truly original thinker." The authors tell of Johnson's pathetic efforts to keep his Jewish ancestry hidden from his Yankee in-laws, his Central New York business associates, and often himself. As Alex Haley, author of Roots, comments in a Foreword, Johnson's story "is part and parcel of the American dream—and the American tragedy."

ONEIDA COMMUNITY PROFILES

By Constance Noyes Robertson

Upstate New York's Oneida Community was one of the most successful of the nineteenth-century experiments in utopian communal living. In two earlier books Constance Noyes Robertson, granddaughter of the Community's founder and leader, John Humphrey Noyes, told the Oneida Community's story—from rural farming commune through the breakup to the joint stock company which was the precursor of today's Oneida Ltd.—based on the Community's many publications. Here Mrs. Robertson tells another more private story, providing an intimate view of the early years, struggles for survival, and individual families' concerns and indecisions about joining or leaving the Community, based on personal letters never intended for publication. There is new material about several branch communes at Manlius and Brooklyn, New York; Newark and Fletcher, New Jersey; and Wallingford, Connecticut.
