

Contributors

- ROBERT ASH is professor of economics with special reference to China and Taiwan in the department of economics and the Centre for Financial and Management Studies, and director of the Taiwan studies programme, at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London.
- PATRICK BELTON is a researcher at Oxford University and president of a foreign policy think tank and professional society.
- CHRIS BRAMALL lectures on the Chinese economy at Sheffield University. His most recent book is Sources of Chinese Economic Growth, 1978–1996.
- TIMOTHY BROOK is principal of St John's College, University of British Columbia, Vancouver.
- CHIEN-PENG CHUNG is currently an assistant professor in the department of politics and sociology at Lingnan University.
- JAE HO CHUNG is professor of international relations and director of the Centre for International Studies at Seoul National University, Korea. He is the author of Central Control and Local Discretion in China (2000).
- CHRIS COGGINS is an associate professor of geography and Asian studies at Simon's Rock College of Bard. He is the author of The Tiger and the Pangolin: Nature, Culture, and Conservation in China (2003).
- FRANK DIKÖTTER is professor of history at the School of Oriental and African Studies. His most recent book is Narcotic Culture: A History of Drugs in China (2004). He is currently finishing an ESRC-funded project on material culture in Republican China.
- ERICA S. DOWNS recently received her PhD in politics from Princeton University. Her research focuses on Chinese energy issues.
- JOSEPH W. ESHERICK is Hwei-chih and Julia Hsiu Professor of Chinese studies at the University of California, San Diego, where he teaches modern Chinese history.
- ANTONIA FINNANE is senior lecturer in history at the University of Melbourne. She is the author of Speaking of Yangzhou: A Chinese City, 1550–1850 (2004), and is currently writing a book about the politics of dress in modern China.
- PIPER GAUBATZ is associate professor of geography at the University of Massachusetts. She is an urban geographer specializing in the analysis of urban form in China and Japan. Her current work examines the impact of economic development zones on urban form; regional disparities between urban development in eastern China and the interior; and the environmental impacts of urban development.
- STEVEN M. GOLDSTEIN teaches political science at Smith College, Northampton, Massachusetts, USA.
- ERIC HARWIT is an associate professor of Asian studies at the University of Hawai'i at Manoa. He is the author of China's Automobile Industry and several other articles on industrial and economic development in Asia. He is currently writing a book about the development of telecommunications and the Internet in China.

JOYCE K. KALLGREN is emeritus professor of political science at the University of California, Davis, research associate at the Institute of East Asian Studies (University of California, Berkeley), and chair of the US Council on Security Co-operation in the Asia-Pacific.

AGNES S. KU is associate professor of sociology at the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology. Her research interests include cultural sociology, the public sphere, civil society, citizenship, Hong Kong studies and gender issues. Her essays have appeared in Sociological Theory, Theory, Culture and Society, International Sociology, The China Quarterly, Modern China and other publications. She is the editor of Remaking Citizenship in Hong Kong – Community, Nation, and the Global City (2004, co-edited with Ngai Pun), and the author of Narratives, Politics, and the Public Sphere – Struggles over Political Reform in the Final Transitional Years in Hong Kong (1992–1994) (1999).

JULIA KWONG is professor of sociology at the University of Manitoba. Her publications cover the areas of sociology of education, women, curriculum, examination system and different aspects of Chinese education. Her books include Cultural Revolution in China's Schools and Political Economy of Corruption in China.

TAO-CHIU LAM is assistant professor of management and marketing at Hong Kong Polytechnic University. He researches rural government and administrative reform in China.

MA QINGGUO is professor of management and a former associate dean of the School of Business Administration at Zhejiang University. He is also the dean of the School of Management at Wenzhou University. He has researched and published in the fields of value engineering, hi-tech industries, enterprise management and Chinese economics. He recently completed a new textbook on management statistics.

MIKAEL MATTLIN is a doctoral candidate at the department of political science, University of Helsinki, Finland, and a member of the Finnish Graduate School of East and South-East Asian Studies. His research interests cover informal political structures and political culture in Taiwan and mainland China; East Asian economic, political and security integration; and China's strategies in building knowledge-based industries and Sino-foreign co-operation in this area.

RANA MITTER is university lecturer in the history and politics of modern China at Oxford University. He is the author of The Manchurian Myth: Nationalism, Resistance, and Collaboration in Modern China (2000) and A Bitter Revolution: China's Struggle with the Modern World (2004).

MICHAEL SCHOENHALS is associate professor of Sinology with special emphasis on modern Chinese society and politics in the department of East Asian languages, Lund University.

VICTOR SHIH is currently assistant professor of political science at Northwestern University. He recently completed his PhD at Harvard University. His dissertation constructs a framework that links elite factional politics with monetary and banking policies in China. He is currently completing papers on the role of China in the economic reform debate, the credibility of Chinese monetary policy, and the state of city commercial banks in China. His next research project explores local governments' incentive to nurture growth or destroy the local economy through taxation policy.

ERIC THUN is assistant professor of politics and international affairs at Princeton University.

ANDREW G. WALDER is professor of sociology at Stanford University and senior fellow at the Stanford Institute for International Studies.

ANDREW WEDEMAN is an associated professor of political science at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln. His research focuses on the political economy of reform in China and, specifically, on the effects of corruption on development, both in China and elsewhere in the developing world. Recent publications include From Mao to Market: Rent Seeking, Local Protectionism, and Marketization in China; "Anticorruption campaigns and the intensification of corruption in China," in Journal of Contemporary China; and "Great disorder under heaven: the paradox of endemic corruption and rapid growth in contemporary China," in China Review.

XU XU received his PhD in management at Zhejiang University in 2002. He now works at the Zhejiang provincial committee of the Chinese Communist Youth League in Hangzhou.

QIAN FORREST ZHANG is a PhD candidate in the department of sociology at Yale University. His current research deals with market development and political advantages in rural China, and self-employment in urban China.

YINGJIN ZHANG is director of Chinese studies and professor of comparative literature, cultural studies and film studies, at the University of California, San Diego, and is the author of The City in Modern Chinese Literature and Film (1996), Screening China (2002), and Chinese National Cinema (2004); co-author of Encyclopedia of Chinese Film (1998); editor of China in a Polycentric World (1998) and Cinema and Urban Culture in Shanghai, 1922–1943 (1999).