Notice to Subscribers

The Review of Politics is proud of a long history of excellence in scholarly publication. Now in its 49th year The Review continues to grow and improve. It is embarrassing then to have had so many difficulties in keeping our regular publication schedule during the past year. Several issues of The Review have experienced delays in printing as a result of a major change in printing procedures. The Review is now fully automated; from the manuscript preparation stage to the final printing phase, the operation is done with the aid of the computer. Though the decision to use computers has occasioned many readjustments, some of which have not been achieved smoothly, in order to remain current with the technology of the printing industry and to hold down cost and to continue to improve the quality of the journal, the decision was necessary. The good news is that the worst is over, and the future is looking brighter. With the Spring 1987 issue The Review will be able to accept manuscripts directly from disc-formatted copy, to control the production of the final printed copy and to resume its regular schedule with greater certainty. The age of computers is an uncertain one, but you have our assurance that quality will not be sacrificed as The Review makes its way in this new era of publishing.
