

THE CONTRIBUTORS

Alisa Gauder is associate professor of political science at Southwestern University in Georgetown, Texas. Gauder received her PhD from the University of California, Berkeley, in 2001. Her research interests include comparative political leadership, campaign finance reform in Japan and the United States, and women and politics. She is the author of Political Reform in Japan: Leadership Looming Large (2007) and the editor of The Routledge Handbook of Japanese Politics (2011).

Phillip Y. Lipsy is assistant professor of political science at Stanford University and Thomas Rohlen Center Fellow at the Shorenstein Asia Pacific Research Center. His research focuses on international and comparative political economy with an emphasis on East Asia, particularly Japan.

Kenneth Mori McElwain is assistant professor of political science at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. His research focuses on the politics of institutional design, including the manipulation of electoral rules, the democratization of political parties, and the formation of national constitutions. His current project examines why Japanese governments are short-lived. He is the coeditor of Political Change in Japan: Electoral Behavior, Party Realignment, and the Koizumi Reforms (2009).

Ethan Scheiner is a member of the University of California, Davis, Department of Political Science. He has published articles in a number of political science and Japanese studies journals. He is the author of Democracy Without Competition in Japan (2006) and Electoral Systems and Political Context (2012, coauthored with Robert G. Moser).

Kay Shimizu is assistant professor in the Department of Political Science and the Weatherhead East Asian Institute at Columbia University. Her research concerns the political economy of Japan and Greater China, with a focus on central local government relations, fiscal politics, and financial institutions. She has published in the Journal of Social Science and is a coeditor of and contributor to Political Change in Japan: Electoral Behavior, Party Realignment, and the Koizumi Reforms (2009).

China and India: Great Power Rivals

MOHAN MALIK

“A crucial study of Sino-India relations as a competitive symbiotic relationship with deep historical underpinnings.”

—Aurora Carlson, Israel Journal of Foreign Affairs

“Likely to become a standard reference.”
—Rajesh Basrur, Contemporary Southeast Asia

Despite burgeoning trade and cultural links, China and India remain fierce competitors in a world of global economic rebalancing, power shifts, resource scarcity, environmental degradation, and other transnational security threats. Mohan Malik explores this increasingly important and complex relationship, grounding his analysis in the history of the two countries.

CONTENTS: Introduction • THE BURDEN OF HISTORY • Strategic Cultures: Pax Sinica vs. Pax Indica • India's China Debate: Eyeing the Dragon • China Perceives India: "Great Power Dreamer" • FLASHPOINTS AND FAULT LINES • Tibet and the Territorial Dispute • The China-Pakistan-India Triangle • Burma: Fulcrum of Rivalry • The Proliferation Axis • Multilateral Maneuvers • WILL THE FUTURE RESEMBLE THE PAST? • Energy Flows and Maritime Rivalries in the Indian Ocean • Triangles, Tilts, and Strategic Futures.

2011/468 pages • hc $79.95

1800 30th Street • Boulder, CO 80301 • Tel: 303-444-6684 • Fax: 303-444-0824
www.firstforumpress.com