Freedom from skin burns, and simplicity of operation are the main features of the new Ediswan Shock Therapy Machine, Model R.1135.

The machine is light weight, self-contained, mains operated and highly reliable. Special electrodes with a push-button switch mounted in the handle of one of them enable the operator personally to have complete control of the electrode position and pressure during a shock and to administer the shock without removing his hands from the electrodes.

The unit is electronically controlled for shock duration from 0.1 second to 1 second; all shocks being instantly repeatable if desired

No skin burns with this NEW shock therapy machine

without moving the hands from the electrodes. Output voltage control is variable from 70 volts to 170 volts, and is independent of mains voltage variations as a visual indicator is supplied on the equipment so that the primary circuit can be adjusted to compensate for difference in mains voltage. The equipment is adequately fused for added safety.
