CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY ARCHIVE

Section VI: Missions to India

"The CMS Archives is one of the richest available sources for scholars concerned with the role of religion in the interaction between Western and non-Western worlds in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries."

Dr Brian Stanley, Director of the North Atlantic Missiology Project,
Cambridge University

This new four part section brings together the complete CMS archive for India for the period 1811-1884. Focusing on this most prominent of mission fields, Section VI covers Bengal and Bihar, the Punjab and Sind, United and Central provinces, Travancore and Cochin as well as Western and Southern India. It offers detailed reports on stations and missionaries, local material addressing shifting opinions on Indian religions and societies as well as much on education, methods of evangelism, and the complex relationships between missionaries and colonial administrators.

REGIONS BEYOND MISSIONARY UNION ARCHIVE

"The Regions Beyond Mission Union...spanned the twentieth century and the world - Africa, Latin America and Asia. Moreover the mission survived the turbulent era of decolonisation in the Belgian Congo, India and Asia, opening up a whole new range of sources for those concerned with the issues of colonialism and post-coloniality."

Professor David Dorward, Director, African Research Institute, La Trobe University, Australia

This new four part microfilm series offers scholars the first opportunity to explore the archive in detail including the minute books referring to all aspects of the administration and policy of the RBMU, correspondence and reports from missions in the Congo (1888-1955), Peru, Argentina, India, Nepal, Kalimantan and Irian Jaya (1893-1955) as well as the principal publications of the RBMU, Regions Beyond (1878-1981) and Horizons (1981-1990).

WOMEN MISSIONARIES

Addressing a range of issues, from contact between native women and Europeans to detailed accounts of local situations, to the role of education and health in colonial development, Part 1 begins with the Papers of the Women's Association for Foreign Missions, 1885-1930, (Church of Scotland) with much on missionary work in India, China, Africa and Nyasaland. Part 2 focuses on work in South Africa, 1878-1904, conducted by the Ladies Society for Female Education in Africa and India, offering a range of material describing the practicalities of missionary work for women.

in Rural America

Jeffrey Marlett

"An excellent work of historical scholarship."—David O'Brien,
College of the Holy Cross

"Original and creative."—Steven Avella,
Marquette University

• Taking their faith to rural America, missionaries in the Catholic Rural Life Movement traveled through the countryside on "motor missions," with mobile altars and folding pews. They saw agricultural life as a saving grace and worked to improve farming practices in areas ravaged by the dust bowl. Seeking to save souls, they also hoped to save the Catholic faith from modernist doctrines.
