

Contributors

- ROBERT ASH is professor of economics with special reference to China and Taiwan in the department of economics and the Centre for Financial and Management Studies, and director of the Taiwan studies programme, at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London.
- BØRGE BAKKEN is a fellow at the research school of Asian and Pacific studies at the Australian National University, Canberra. He was formerly a senior research fellow at the Nordic Institute of Asian Studies (NIAS), Copenhagen (1995–2001). He is author of The Exemplary Society: Human Improvement, Social Control and the Dangers of Modernity in China (Oxford University Press, 2000).
- T. H. BARRETT is professor of East Asian history at SOAS, University of London. His main interests lie in the history of religion in China, but also in constructions of China in the West, particularly Great Britain.
- CHRIS BERRY is professor of film and television studies at Goldsmith's College, University of London. His recent publications include Postsocialist Cinema in Post-Mao China: The Cultural Revolution after the Cultural Revolution (2004); Cinema and Nation: China on Screen (with Mary Farquhar, 2005); Chinese Films in Focus: 25 New Takes (editor, 2003); Island on the Edge: Taiwan New Cinema and After (co-editor with Feii Lu, 2005); and Mobile Cultures: New Media and Queer Asia (co-editor with Fran Martin and Audrey Yue, 2003).
- MARC BLECHER is professor of politics and East Asian studies at Oberlin College, Ohio. His most recent books are the second edition of China Against the Tides and Asian Politics in Development (co-edited with Bob Benewick and Sarah Cook). His current research focuses on workers' politics and on the political economy of urbanization in Xinji, Hebei (joint with Vivienne Shue).
- JEREMY BROWN is a PhD candidate in modern Chinese history at the University of California, San Diego. His dissertation focuses on the formation of rural-urban difference in the Tianjin region during the Mao period.
- JAMES CARTER is assistant professor of history at Saint Joseph's University, in Philadelphia. He is the author of Creating a Chinese Harbin: Nationalism in an International City, 1916–1932 (Cornell, 2002).
- CHRISTOPHER DENT is senior lecturer in the East Asian economy in the department of East Asian studies at the University of Leeds. His research interests centre on the international political economy of East Asia and the Asia-Pacific, specifically new trade policy developments; the foreign economic policies of Singapore, South Korea and Taiwan; East Asian developing countries, multilateralism and globalization; East Asia's economic relations with the European Union; and theories of international economic security. Published books include Asia-Pacific Economic and Security Co-operation

(editor, Palgrave Macmillan, 2003); The Foreign Economic Policies of Singapore, South Korea and Taiwan (Edward Elgar, 2002); Northeast Asian Regionalism: Learning from the European Experience (co-editor, Curzon, 2002); The European Union and East Asia: An Economic Relationship (Routledge, 1999); The European Economy: The Global Context (Routledge, 1997). He is currently writing a book on the recent proliferation of free trade agreement (FTA) projects in the Asia-Pacific.

RICHARD LOUIS EDMONDS is visiting senior lecturer, geography department, King's College, University of London and associate member, Center for East Asian Studies, University of Chicago. He is currently co-editing a book on environmental NGOs in China.

SUSAN GREENHALGH is professor of anthropology at the University of California, Irvine. She has published numerous articles on the making, enforcement, politics, and social consequences of the one-child policy and is the author, with Edwin A. Winckler, of Governing China's Population: Regime Capacity and Biopolitics (Stanford University Press). Her article in this issue is part of a larger project on the origins of the one-child policy that will be published by the University of California Press.

THOMAS HEBERER is professor of political science and East Asian studies at the University of Duisburg-Essen in Germany. He has published extensively on various issues of social and political change in China and Vietnam, nationalities issues, corruption, and private sector development. One of his recent books is Private Entrepreneurs in China and Vietnam: Social and Political Functioning of Strategic Groups, Leiden (Brill) 2003.

ANDREA JANKU is assistant professor of classical Sinology at the University of Heidelberg. Publications include a monograph on political discourse in the late Qing Shanghai press (in German) and an article on the relationship between statecraft discourse and journalistic writings (T'oung-pao 90). He is currently engaged in a project on the cultural history of disasters in late imperial China.

ALISA JONES is currently completing her PhD dissertation on history education in post-Mao China at the University of Leeds, and has co-edited and contributed two chapters to the forthcoming Routledge volume History Education and National Identity in East Asia.

ROBIN JONES is a lecturer in the School of Sport and Exercise Sciences at Loughborough University with a long standing interest in sport in China.

AZIZUR RAHMAN KHAN is professor of economics at the University of California, Riverside. Previously he worked as a staff member of the World Bank and the International Labour Organization; taught at the London School of Economics; and held the position of Research Director at the Pakistan Institute of Development Economics (later Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies).

JEFFREY C. KINKLEY is a professor of history at St. John's University, New York City. His publications on modern Chinese history and literature, Shen Congwen, Chinese modernism, and law and humanities, include Chinese Justice, the Fiction: Law and Literature in Modern China (2000). His forthcoming work is on the Chinese discourses of corruption and literary realism.

Y. Y. KUEH is professor of business administration and dean of the faculty of commerce at Chuhai College, Hong Kong. He taught at various universities in Hong Kong, the US and Australia for over 30 years, and retired recently to join Chuhai, a private, government-recognized, degree-awarding institution. His research on the Chinese economy (industry, agriculture, trade and economic reforms) has produced many publications including books published by Oxford Clarendon, Palgrave-Macmillan, RoutledgeCurzon, Hong Kong University Press, and numerous articles in international academic journals.

PING-HUI LIAO is professor of literary and critical studies at National Tsinghua University, Taiwan. He is author of seven books in Chinese and numerous essays in English, and is currently finishing a book on Chinese diasporas and visual culture.

FELICITY LUFKIN is a lecturer in the department of East Asian languages and civilizations at Harvard University.

MELANIE MANION is professor of political science and public affairs at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, and author of Corruption by Design: Building Clean Government in Mainland China and Hong Kong (2004). Her current research examines electoral losses by 'official' candidates, vetted and selected by Communist Party committees for local government leadership.

ANDREW C. MERTHA is assistant professor of political science and the Earle H. and Suzanne S. Harbison Faculty Fellow at Washington University in St. Louis. He is the author of The Politics of Piracy: Intellectual Property in Contemporary China (Cornell University Press, 2005) and has articles appearing in Comparative Politics and International Organization. His current research project is on the politics of dam building in China.

LAURA PALER is currently completing a graduate degree in politics at Oxford University, St. Antony's College. Her current research explores the relationship between taxation and representation in developing countries, with a focus on China. She also is a graduate of The George Washington University and worked for several years on Asia programs at the National Democratic Institute for International Affairs (NDI).

CARL RISKIN is distinguished professor of economics at Queens College, CUNY and senior research scholar at Columbia University's Weatherhead East Asian Institute. His book with A.R. Khan, Inequality and Poverty in China in the Age of Globalization (Oxford) appeared in 2001, as did his co-edited volume, China's Retreat from Equality (M.E. Sharpe). He has also done extensive work on human development issues for the United Nations Development Programme.

STANLEY ROSEN is a professor of political science at the University of Southern California.

MICHAEL SCHOENHALS is associate professor of Sinology in the department of East Asian languages, Lund University, Sweden. He has edited China's Cultural Revolution, 1966–1969: Not a Dinner Party (1996), recently finished – together with Roderick MacFarquhar – the manuscript of a book-length history of the Cultural Revolution, and is presently embarked upon a project, funded by the Swedish Research Council, on confidential records and social control in Mao's China.

YUMIN SHENG is completing his PhD in political science at Yale University. His dissertation examines the political response of the Chinese central state to the country's ongoing integration with the world market, and the consequences of the evolving central political grip for national governance. From August 2005, he will be an assistant professor of political science at Wayne State University in Michigan.

SCOTT WILSON is associate professor and Chair of political science at Sewanee: The University of the South (Tennessee, USA). His early research focused on rural market reforms and social structure. His current research addresses foreign investment and institutional change in China.

KA ZENG is an assistant professor of political science at the University of Arkansas. Her most recent publication is Trade Threats, Trade Wars: Bargaining, Retaliation, and American Coercive Diplomacy (University of Michigan Press, 2004).

XUN ZHOU is currently an ESRC research fellow in the history department, SOAS, University of London. Her most recent publications including Narcotic Culture: A History of Drugs in China (2004), and Smoke: A Global History (2004).