

PUBLICATION POLICY AND NOTES FOR CONTRIBUTORS

The main purpose of this Journal is to foster the development of psychology as a discipline and as a profession within the South Pacific region. In particular, the Journal aims to provide a forum for psychologists indigenous to the region and to serve as an archive for psychological studies especially germane to the region. Studies demonstrating how cultural conditions limit general psychological principles are welcomed, as are studies evaluating the applicability of psychological technologies, including therapies and measurements, with specific cultural groups. The Journal welcomes contributions across theoretical orientations and is receptive to studies incorporating qualitative as well as quantitative methods.
