Honorable Mention for 2001 Ralph Bunche Award

The 2001 Ralph Bunche Book Award committee composed of Dianne Pinderhughes, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, chair; Andrew Hacker, CUNY, Queen's College; and Louis DeSioio, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign designated Shades of Citizenship: Race and the Census in Modern Politics by Mellissa Nobles as an honorable mention for the 2001 prize. The citation below was mistakenly omitteed from the December 2001 issue of PS.

Shades of Citizenship compares the changing meanings of race as categorized by censuses in two nations in the western hemisphere with large populations of African descent, the United States from 1790 to the present and Brazil from 1872 to the present. This complex work explores the underlying relationships between the definitions of race in these two countries, the political issues associated with the operations of the Census Bureaus in each nation, the impact of their categorizations on "the formation of racial ideas," and their effect on policy formation. Nobles lavs out the dimensions of difference about racial discourse over time in each nation, without treating the two as stable, dichotomized cases: Brazil the racial democracy, and the United States, the racial hierarchy. Instead she clarifies with great care the changing origins and evolution of racial ideas within each nation, based on the interaction of legal, economic, philosophical, scientific, religious, political and cultural thought and their impact on "race science." Nobles successfully masters the comparison of two complex cases whose English and Portugese colonial origins required substantial familiarity with distinctly different types and categories of sources.
