

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

CALEB BERNACCHIO is a doctoral candidate in management and business ethics at IESE Business School. His interests center upon the intersection of neo-Aristotelian practical philosophy and organization studies. Bernacchio's research has addressed topics ranging from the ethical salience of vulnerability within organizations and the normative basis of employee rights to the role of business ethics in the micro-foundations of firm performance.

RYAN BURG serves as visiting assistant professor at Bucknell University's Freeman College of Management. He holds a joint PhD in business ethics and sociology from the University of Pennsylvania. His research focuses on the scope of business responsibility, particularly where state and market failures coincide. His current project considers the moral animus of money, asking whether movements to reform currency might improve upon the ecological disappointments of private and public regulation. Burg recently published Business Ethics for a Material World (2018), which was a finalist for the Academy of Management's 2019 Social Issues in Management book award.

PAULINE FATIEN DIOCHON is an educator and researcher in management with a focus on the ethical, spatial, and political dimensions of organizational phenomena, such as leadership development (especially coaching) and collaborative arenas (such as creative labs). Her latest work has been published at Organization, Scandinavian Journal of Management, Journal of Management Inquiry, Leadership, and Revue Française de Gestion. Holding a PhD in management from HEC School of Management in Paris, she has international academic experience in the United States and Colombia and is now an associate professor of management at SKEMA Business School, France.

JERRY GOODSTEIN is professor in the Department of Management, Information Systems, and Entrepreneurship, Carson College of Business, Washington State University, Vancouver. He received his PhD (management) from the University of California, Berkeley, and his MBA from the University of California, Los Angeles. His work has been published in leading management and business ethics journals such as Administrative Science Quarterly, Academy of Management Journal, Business Ethics Quarterly, Journal of Business Ethics, Journal of Organizational Behavior, Journal of Management, Organizational Science, Organization Studies, and Strategic Management Journal. Goodstein served on the editorial boards of the Academy of Management Journal (1994–8), Administrative Science Quarterly (1996–2005), and the Journal of Management, where he also served as associate editor (2006–8). He is currently an associate editor of Business Ethics Quarterly. His current research interests are in the areas of employer reintegration of ex-offenders, restorative justice in organizations, and corporate and stakeholder responsibility.

SANTIAGO MEJIA is an assistant professor of business ethics at the Gabelli School of Business, Fordham University. His research interests span moral psychology, virtue ethics, organizational behavior, and normative ethical theories of businesses. He is currently developing a project identifying the obligations that shareholder primacy imposes on managers and shareholders. His research on moral psychology brings together empirical results from clinical psychology, social psychology, and cognitive science with theoretical insights of virtue ethicists. He was awarded the Founders' Award for Emerging Scholars by the Society for Business Ethics in 2016.

JEAN NIZET has a background in sociology and philosophy. He has coauthored several dozen peer-reviewed papers, and coauthored or coedited more than twenty books, mainly in the domains of organization theory and human resource management. He is a professor emeritus at two universities in Belgium (Catholic University of Louvain-la-Neuve and Namur University).

AMY SEPINWALL is an associate professor at the Wharton School of Business at the University of Pennsylvania in the Department of Legal Studies and Business Ethics. She holds a JD from Yale Law School, and a PhD in Philosophy from Georgetown. Sepinwall's research calls for an expansion of the understandings of responsibility standardly advanced in law and ethics, and a deflation of the conception of the corporation pervading much legal and public discourse. More specifically, she pursues two main research streams, the first looking at questions of responsibility for financial and corporate wrongdoing and the second interrogating the notion of corporate constitutional rights. She has published work in numerous venues including Business Ethics Quarterly, Georgia Law Review (on wedding vendors and free speech rights), Philosopher's Compass (entry on corporate moral responsibility), and the Harvard Business Law Review and University of Chicago Law Review (both on corporations and religious freedom rights).