

MIRIAM DOBSON is senior lecturer at the University of Sheffield, where she has worked since 2004. Her first monograph, Khrushchev's Cold Summer: Gulag Returnees, Crime, and the Fate of Reform after Stalin (Cornell University Press), was published in 2009. She is currently principal investigator on an Arts and Humanities Research Council-funded project titled "Protestants behind the Iron Curtain: Religious Belief, Identity, and Narrative in Russia and Ukraine since 1945."

EDWARD GEIST received his PhD in history from the University of North Carolina in May 2013 and is presently a MacArthur Nuclear Security Fellow at the Center for International Security and Cooperation at Stanford University. A native of Oak Ridge, Tenn., and a former Stanton Nuclear Security Fellow at the RAND Corporation in Washington, D.C., his research interests include emergency management in nuclear disasters, Soviet politics and culture, and the history of nuclear power and weapons. A previous recipient of Fulbright-Hays and American Councils fellowships to conduct research in Moscow and Kiev, he has published articles in the Journal of Cold War Studies, Russian Review, and the Bulletin of the History of Medicine.

KATHRYN E. GRABER is assistant professor of anthropology and central Eurasian studies at Indiana University Bloomington. Her current book project, Mixed Messages: Language, Media, and Belonging in Asian Russia, focuses on the Buriat territories, where she has been conducting ethnographic, archival, and sociolinguistic research since 2005. Graber's work on Buriatia has appeared in Language & Communication and Inner Asia as well as a number of Russian publications. She also publishes on digital media and intellectual property.

POLLY JONES is associate professor and Shrecker-Barbour Fellow in Russian at University College, University of Oxford. She was previously lecturer at University College London School of Slavonic and East European Studies and has held fellowships at Princeton University and St. Antony's College, Oxford. She is the author of Myth, Memory, Trauma: Rethinking the Stalinist Past in the Soviet Union, 1953–70 (Yale University Press, 2013) and editor of The Dilemmas of De-Stalinization: Negotiating Cultural and Social Change in the Khrushchev Era (Routledge Publishers, 2006) and The Leader Cult in Communist Dictatorships: Stalin and the Eastern Bloc (Palgrave Macmillan, 2004). She has also written numerous articles on post-Stalinist cultural politics and is currently working on a book project on biography and the "Fiery Revolutionaries" (Plamennyye revoliutsionery) biographical series in the Brezhnev era.

MAIKE LEHMANN is assistant professor in the Department of Eastern European History at the University of Cologne, Germany. She has worked on locally defined national views on socialism in Soviet Armenia and encounters between Soviet and diaspora Armenians in the aftermath of World War II. Her current projects include a transnational intellectual and everyday history of the Cold

Slavic Review 74, no. 1 (Spring 2015)

War that looks at exiled Soviet dissidents' encounters with their western supporters, a comparative essay on the individual under late socialism, and a study on popular Russian orientalism since the late nineteenth century.

JESSE D. MURRAY, a graduate of the doctoral program in history at the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign, is an independent scholar based in Oakland, Calif. Her current book project, Conversion Encounters and the Construction of the Russian Empire in Nineteenth-Century Siberia, explores the role of encounters between Russian Orthodox missionaries and Buriats in constructing empire at a local level. Her work has been published in Russian History and several Russian and American collections.

CLAIRE SHAW is lecturer in Russian at the University of Bristol. She completed her PhD at the School of Slavonic and East European Studies, University College London, and was the recipient of a Scouloudi Fellowship (2009–10) and a Past and Present Fellowship (2010–11) from the Institute of Historical Research. She is currently completing a monograph on the history of the deaf community in Soviet Russia.