COVER PICTURE		Not long after arriving in Antarctica in 1910, H.G. Ponting discovered a grotto in an iceberg, where he took many photographs looking out toward Terra Nova , about a mile distant. In this previously unpublished picture, Griffith Taylor and Charles Wright can be seen inspecting the ice tunnel. Later, they cut steps in it and climbed to the top, a feat Ponting captured on his cinematograph. This picture is published in the new book The photographs of HG Ponting .
