INTERNATIONAL LAW

Current and Classic

By RICHARD N. SWIFT, New York University

"An excellent piece of work, very carefully done, with precision and control. . . . It would appeal to those teachers who wanted to combine the traditional conception of international law with the most recent substantive developments . . . an admirable teaching tool."—Richard A. Falk, Princeton University.

All the conventional subjects of international law are covered in this text but with an immediacy rare in either legal textbooks or casebooks. It combines readable prose exposition with up-to-date case and documentary materials, drawn not only from classical cases but also from materials relating to issues as current as the war in Vietnam. Much of the excessive documentation and jargon included in legal tomes are omitted and students are brought directly to major issues in the field. These range from fishing disputes and border controversies to the development of outer space law, the uses of the United Nations, and major questions of peace and war. 1969 Approx. 592 pages $10.95
