
A Dravidian Etymological Dictionary

Second Edition

T. Burrow and M. B. Emeneau

This edition incorporates the original dictionary (1961) and the supplement (1968); about 1000 new entries have been added, and many of the old ones have been greatly expanded. The dictionary is a complete and systematic account of the common vocabulary of all the Dravidian languages, together with many Indo-Aryan items considered to be loan-words from Dravidian. There are complete indexes of all the individual languages represented. £40

The Fashoda Incident of 1898

Encounter on the Nile

Darrell Bates

In the summer of 1898 a dramatic confrontation took place at the abandoned mud-brick fort of Fashoda on the upper Nile, between Kitchener's gunboats and a small band of Frenchmen. It was the culmination of a wider international race for the control of what was thought to be a key point in the scramble for power in Africa, a scramble in which the emperor Menelik of Ethiopia, aided by some colourful Russian officers, showed himself to be as acquisitive and ruthless an imperialist as any of the western powers. Darrell Bates here tells the full story of the Fashoda affair for the first time in English. Illustrated £15

Modern India

The Origins of an Asian Democracy

Judith M. Brown

This is a major new account of the last two centuries of Indian history. It traces the emergence of India as an independent democratic state, through a process of interaction between its stable society with a rich cultural heritage and forces emanating from the industrializing west. New research has recently revolutionized understanding of political change in India; this book suggests a more complex but exciting way of understanding that change than a confrontation between an emerging 'nationalistic movement' and monolithic imperialism. THE SUDAN MEMOIRS OF
CARL CHRISTIAN GIEGLER PASHA 1873-83

EDITED BY RICHARD HILL

An original, controversial narrative by a German deputy to three governor-generals of the Sudan, C. G. Gordon Pasha and his two Egyptian successors. By an extraordinary turn of fortune Carl Christian Giegler left the factory floor of Siemens Brothers' works at Woolwich in 1873 to become a telegraph engineer in the Sudan and emerged six years later as His Excellency the Deputy Governor-General and a pasha.

It was mainly the solid virtues of his German artisan's upbringing which moved Gordon to secure for him such spectacular preferment from his master the Khedive Ismail. Giegler turned out to be one of Gordon's wiser nominations for, in spite of his new life in the highest ranks of the Turkish-Egyptian élite, he never lost his native values: his personal frugality, his ability to distinguish a gentleman from a colourful fraud, his searing judgements on lazy bounders whether Egyptians or those British adventurers who sought employment in the Sudan simply as an excuse to shoot big game. He never hid his own weaknesses and was no flatterer of others; when he wrote of Gordon, who was indeed his benefactor, he criticized kindly and with gratitude.

With little administrative experience and no social advantages, he worked with his Muslim superiors and colleagues and with the British overlords who, after 1882, established themselves in Egypt and its possessions; with the quarrelsome consuls of the European Powers and with the people of the vast majority, the Sudanese, initially in peace and finally in the bloody violence of the Mahdist war.
