
CONTRIBUTORS

ALENA ALAMGIR is a doctoral candidate in the department of sociology at Rutgers University. She is completing her dissertation on the Czechoslovak-Vietnamese labor exchange program. Her work on the racialization of Vietnamese workers appeared in Race & Class 54, no. 4 (April–June 2013), under the title “Race Is Elsewhere: State-Socialist Ideology and the Racialisation of Vietnamese Workers in Czechoslovakia.” She is also the author of “‘The Learned Brāhmen, Who Assists Me’: Changing Colonial Relationships in the 18th and 19th Century India,” published in The Journal of Historical Sociology 19, no. 4 (December 2006).

MOLLY THOMASY BLASING is visiting instructor in Russian at Oberlin College and is completing her PhD in Slavic languages and literatures at the University of Wisconsin–Madison. Her dissertation, on the influence of photography on modern Russian poetry, is titled Writing with Light: Photo-Poetic Encounters in Tsvetaeva, Pasternak, and Brodsky. Her research interests include the intersection of poetry and the visual arts, contemporary political performance culture, and foreign language pedagogy.

ANGELA BRINTLINGER is professor of Slavic languages and cultures at Ohio State University. Her recent publications include the monograph Chapaev and his Comrades: War and the Russian Literary Hero across the Twentieth Century (Academic Studies Press, 2012) and Chekhov for the 21st Century (Slavica, 2012), a collection of essays she coedited with Carol Apollonio.

BETH GREENE received her PhD in history from the University of California, Los Angeles, in spring 2013. Her research interests include consumption, popular culture, and youth culture under state socialism, focusing particularly on Hungary in the 1960s. Beth currently lives and works in Washington, D.C.

AGATA FIJALKOWSKI is senior lecturer at Lancaster University Law School, United Kingdom. She has a PhD in law from the University of London. She has written about Polish constitutional developments in From Old Times to New Europe: The Polish Struggle for Democracy and Constitutionalism (Ashgate, 2010). Her recent publications address retrospective justice in Germany and postcommunist Europe. Her current research focuses on transitional criminal justice in Poland, Romania, and Albania.

MARIA RUBINS is senior lecturer in Russian literature at the School of Slavonic and East European Studies, University College London. She is the author of Crossroads of Arts, Crossroads of Cultures: Ecphrasis in Russian and French Poetry (Palgrave, 2000), the editor of Russian Émigré Writers of the Twentieth Century for the Dictionary of Literary Biography

Slavic Review 73, no. 1 (Spring 2014)

(Gale, 2005) and several annotated volumes of Russian émigré prose, and the translator into Russian of works by Judith Gautier, Irène Némirovsky, and Arnaud Delalande. Her current research explores the writing of the interwar Russian diaspora from a comparative and interdisciplinary perspective.